But probably some of these deaths were caused by famine diarrhœa. Excluding cholera and small-pox, the public health has been fairly good.

The markets continue to be well supplied with grain; and though there is a slight rise in prices reported in the Kolar and Shimoga districts, they generally are remarkably steady, and bear favourable comparison with the rates prevailing during the year of scarcity, 1866. In that year the carrying power of the railway was not so developed, as tested by the touchstone of prices, which were respectively during the height of the crisis at that time :—

Rice 9 lbs. per rupee as against 12¾ lbs. in current week.
Ragi 13¼ lbs. ditto 16¾ lbs. ditto

The weight imported by rail was at the terminal station			3,458 tons, at the Kolar Road Station	...	...	250 „

a large increase on the figures of the previous week, which were exceptionally low. Of this quantity, 3,194 tons were drawn from Madras, 361 from Beypore, 46 from Negapatam by the alternative route, and the remainder from neighbouring districts of the Madras Presidency. An unlooked-for export of grain from Mysore to Kolar Road to the extent of 23 tons has attracted the Chief Commissioner's attention. It is probably rice grown under the Cauvery Channels, which is much esteemed, and commands a ready sale.

The daily average number of people employed on relief works by the revenue officers shows an increase of 3,087 as compared with the previous week: the increase is chiefly in the Bangalore and Chitaldroog districts; but in Kolar and Túmkúr there has been a considerable falling off, and a corresponding increase in those gratuitously fed. This is in some measure due to the operation of the house-to-house visitation ordered in Proceedings No. 11381 of the 9th February last, but more critical enquiries are being made in this direction, and a scale for this form of relief, that demands the exercise of much judgment and careful administration, has been laid down for general adoption throughout the province, accompanied by brief rules, which it is hoped will ensure uniformity of practice and a more generally correct procedure.

Those persons employed by the professional department are doing good work on well-selected projects; those employed on relief works under civil agency are similarly doing useful work on irrigation works, village improvements, collecting metal on lines of roads already made but not metalled, and tracing new inter-village communications. A progress report of each work made up to the end of March has been ordered, and fuller details will be given in subsequent returns. Monthly registers of all employed on relief works, or gratuitously relieved during the crisis, are being prepared, but some little time must elapse before they can be called quite complete; no effort, however, will be spared to make them so. The Commissioners of Divisions have been asked to submit revised returns of affected areas, either by map colouration, or by talukwar or hobliwar statements; the results will appear, if possible, in the next return.

With regard to the subject of emigrated Mysoreans mentioned in the return for week ending 3rd March 1877, and the appointment of a special officer to arrange for their removal to their own taluks from Madaksira, Hindupur and Penukonda, Colonel Hay reports that he also has issued to the Deputy Commissioner of Mysore special instructions, which appear very judicious, to arrange similarly for the return of any Mysore labourers who may have emigrated to the Wynaad. Colonel Hay considers it would be of advantage for the authorities of that district to place an officer at the frontier for the purpose of refusing admission to such as the Government of Madras may wish excluded; all of whom, he adds, can be received by the officer in charge of the Gundlupet road, and be either passed back to Mysore or employed in the Nanjangúd sub-division.

The return for the next week will be got up in an improved form. The tabular statement will be separated from the explanatory remarks, which will contain condensed information on all points connected with the condition of the province, for which purpose a diary of all the principal points has been opened. It is hoped that after the return for the week ending March 17th has been despatched, all future returns will be posted on the Saturday evening next succeeding that up to which all the provincial returns are closed.

MILITARY LUNATICS BILL.

ACT XXIII OF 1867 CONTINUANCE BILL.

The Hon'ble SIR EDWARD BAYLEY introduced the Bill to prolong and amend Act No. XXIII of 1867. He said that he had nothing to add to what he had said on the last occasion, except as regards the statistics of crime, of which he then promised to give a more accurate account. Since the last meeting he had received a telegram from the Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjáb, from which it appeared that whereas, before the passing of the Act, twenty-four officers were either killed or seriously wounded on the frontier within about twenty years, since the passing of the Act there had been only four such cases, and there was besides another attempted outrage within the last few days.

The Bill itself providing merely for a continuation of the existing law, and the amendment of it proposed being purely technical, to meet an executive arrangement which had been made since the passing of the Act, he did not propose to ask the Council to refer the Bill to a Select Committee, but, with His Excellency's permission, he would at the next meeting request the Council to take it into consideration, and if they agreed to do so, would ask them also to pass it.

The Hon'ble MR. COCKERELL desired, with His Excellency's permission, to say a few words in regard to this Bill, as owing to the absence of any proposal for its reference to a Select Committee, there was no distinct motion before the Council, and consequently any remarks on the subject of it would, without such permission, be out of order. The hon'ble mover appeared to think that the acceptance of this Bill by the Council was such a purely formal matter that it need not be referred to a Select Committee, and in fact, required little or no consideration. He (MR. COCKERELL), however, took a very different view of the question, and his object in desiring to draw attention to the circumstances of the case at the present stage of the Bill was to obtain further information, if any could be supplied, as to the need for the retention, or rather re-enactment—for Act XXIII of 1867 had already become extinct—of a law of such an exceptional character. He hoped that, unless what he had now to say elicited the communication of more substantial grounds than had yet been put forward for the proposed enactment, the Council would hesitate before according its sanction to the measure. He thought that very possibly some members of the Council at least were not aware of the nature of Act XXIII of 1867, and if he were asked briefly to say what that Act was, he should say it was an Act to enable certain authorities in the Panjáb to hang a man first and to try him afterwards! But he submitted that an exceptional procedure, such as was provided by this Act, should only be adopted under very exceptional circumstances; and the question before the Council was whether at the present time the circumstances of the Panjáb were such as to call for exceptional legislation of this sort.

The special jurisdiction to be conferred by the Bill was of a kind that even the Hon'ble Member (Mr. Hope) who had charge of a Bill for extending certain portions of the Criminal Procedure Code to the Presidency-towns, had never, even at the period of his most uncompromising proposals for increasing the jurisdiction of the Presidency Magistrates, desired to confer upon those gentlemen! Now he would ask, what were the circumstances under which the Council was asked to sanction the re-application of this time-expired enactment to the whole of the Panjáb province? The hon'ble member had told the Council that during the ten years during which Act XXIII of 1867 had been in operation, there had been something less than six trials under special procedure, and as far as he (MR. COCKERELL) knew, the only grounds for immediately proceeding with the measure were contained in a paper which he would read to the Council. It was an extract of a letter from the Officiating Secretary to the Government of the Panjáb, dated the 24th July 1876.

"The Lieutenant-Governor is glad to be able to observe that the provisions of this Act have been found rarely necessary to enforce, and at the present time in the Panjáb it might be argued with much force that it was undesirable to maintain this special legislation; but after full consideration, His Honour is of opinion that it may be wise to retain the power which Act XXIII of 1867 grants, as no harm is done should the provisions remain dormant, while an epidemic of fanaticism in some of the border-districts of the province might make it very desirable that the powers conferred by the Act should be in possession of the Local Government."

That was all that could be said apparently by the head of the province in favour of the hon'ble member's proposal, and it was particularly stated that it was only required for the frontier or border-districts. Now, as the Council was aware, since the passing of Act XXIII of 1867, Parliament had enacted, under 33 Vic., certain provisions by which His Excellency the Viceroy was enabled to put a special legal procedure of the kind contemplated by the Bill in force in the frontier-districts of the Panjáb province without coming to this Council for a formal enactment. He thought that laws of such an exceptional character as Act XXIII of 1867, should be brought upon the Statute-book with extreme reluctance, and only when the necessity for their being so placed was undeniable.

Such, he submitted, could not be correctly asserted as regards the present case; for the Act, 33 Vic., had been enacted, as he had always believed, for the express purpose of meeting emergent cases of this kind; his contention was therefore, that (1) it was doubtful whether there was any longer occasion for maintaining or reinstituting this special procedure in regard to certain criminal offences; (2) that in any case the need for the exercise of such special jurisdiction was confined to the Peshawar and possibly other frontier-districts, and this could never justify the enactment of a special law for application to the whole of the Panjáb; and (3) that the proper remedy consisted in the exercise of the powers conferred on the Governor General by English Statute, as preferable to the interposition of this Council.

The Hon'ble MR. EGERTON said it appeared to him that his hon'ble friend, Mr. Cockerell, had divided his remarks into two heads. One was the procedure of Act XXIII of 1867, which he briefly described as a law which permitted certain petty officers to hang a man first and try him afterwards. MR. EGERTON submitted that that was not a correct description of the Act. It was an Act which was passed after full deliberation by this Council under the presidency of a Governor General who was particularly acquainted with the condition and circumstances of the districts to which the Act applied; and so far from the procedure being lax, it was in his opinion as strict as the ordinary criminal procedure, and provided for assessors sitting with the Judge who presided over the Court which tried the criminals, and it differed from the ordinary criminal procedure in little else than providing that the sentences which were passed would not be subject to the sanction of the Chief Court of the Panjáb. He should not argue regarding the correctness of the procedure which the law provided any further than to say that it seemed unnecessary to do so, inasmuch as it was passed before in this Council, and had been in force for the last ten years without producing any of the evils which a law such as his hon'ble friend had described would be likely to produce.

The second point in his hon'ble friend's remarks related to the necessity for continuing the enactment. MR. EGERTON submitted that this was a point on which the opinion of the Local Government should be allowed the greatest weight. Although it had so happened, happily, that during the time the law had been in force a very small number of cases had been tried under its provisions, yet he thought the argument to be derived from that fact was one which might fairly be interpreted in favour of the continuance of the law and not for its abolition. It was probable that the short and speedy procedure which the law supplied had been effectual in preventing the outrages against which it was directed. And it was very possible that if this law were allowed to expire, it might be considered by the frontier-tribes that the opportunity had been given them of perpetrating outrages from which they had for some time abstained. Encouragement might be given to evilly disposed fanatics and might cost the lives of many European officers. And he thought it was desirable, as the Local Government had requested, that the Act should be continued in force. If it were not required frequently to be put in operation, the special procedure which was considered objectionable would be of course little used and the continuance of the Act would be unobjectionable.

THE HON'BLE SIR EDWARD BAYLEY said, although there was no motion before the Council and this discussion was somewhat irregular, as it would naturally arise rather on the proposal to introduce the Bill, when it was the custom to discuss the policy of intended measures, nevertheless, as His Excellency the President had permitted the hon'ble member to make some observations upon the Bill, he thought it might be well that he should continue the discussion, and offer some explanation as to the remarks which had been made, in the degree which they seemed to require explanation.

He thought his hon'ble friend's remarks might be divided into three heads:—first, that the law was a bad law; secondly, that it was unnecessary; and thirdly, that if it were necessary, the better way to provide for it would be by a Regulation under the Statute 33 Victoria.

As regards the badness of the Bill, he had said before all that need be said, and he might say that, with the exception of the remarks under the last head, he had already by anticipation answered most of the arguments which the Hon'ble Member had brought forward. The original Bill, he would again remind the Hon'ble Member, was introduced at the request of the Panjáb Government, in a Council which was presided over by the man of all others who knew most of the circumstances of the Panjáb. It was approved by some of the ablest members and best jurists who ever sat in this Council. Therefore as far as the necessity for the provisions of the Bill at the time was concerned, and the fitness of those provisions to meet that necessity, he thought the Bill required no advocacy from him. As regards the assertion that it was a Bill to hang a man first and try him afterwards, if the Hon'ble Member had read the discussions which passed on the former Bill, he would find that that question was distinctly answered by Sir Henry Maine, who said that it was not a Bill to hang a man first and try him afterwards, for in all these cases the perpetrator of the outrage invariably not only confessed but boasted of what he had done: there was no question of evidence, no question of fact whatever; the man was only too glad to declare his act and to bear his guilt.

In respect of the present necessity for the Bill, he thought what had fallen from his hon'ble friend Mr. Egerton, who himself had been well acquainted with the operation of the Bill for the last ten years, and who would be responsible for its operation hereafter, might be accepted as sufficient authority. But he thought that the extract itself which the hon'ble member read from the letter of the Government of the Panjáb was pretty good evidence of the correctness of the assertion that this Bill was required. It was true that the number of these outrages was not very large, and that they had decreased since the passing of the law in 1867. As he had said before, in the twenty years which preceded the passing of the Act, there were twenty-four officers either killed or seriously wounded by assassins on the frontier. Besides these, there were many attempts which were not recorded. He himself was acquainted with two such cases in which murderous attacks had been made on two most eminent men, General Nicholson and Sir Herbert Edwardes, who were repeatedly attacked and had to defend themselves by their own weapons. In the early days there was scarcely a civil officer whose life was not attempted by fanatics. Since the passing of the Act, as was stated in the letter to which reference had been made, there had been only four such cases, but since the writing of that letter there had been an attempt at another, the report of which was only received by him the day before yesterday.

Then came the question, what were the causes of these outrages? If the Act had removed the causes of them, there might have been some reason to say that the Act was no longer necessary. But the causes remained in exactly the same force, or nearly the same force, as before. It was possible—and in that respect his statements on the last occasion were perhaps not perfectly clear—that within our frontier there was now maintained a better degree of order. Still these outrages were not committed by men from within our borders, but by members of the wild and lawless tribes who were outside the border, and who were in much the same condition—just as fanatic, just as blood-thirsty, just as hostile—as before 1867. The causes therefore remained, and the only reason that could be given for the diminution of these outrages was that the sharp, short, and certain method of punishment which the Act had provided deterred these people from committing outrages. The Panjáb Government therefore naturally objected to its repeal or extinction, and they wished that they should be empowered to continue to give their officers the same protection in the future as they had enjoyed in the past.

One other observation it was necessary for him to make on the Hon'ble Member's suggestion that it would have been better to pass this Bill under the special Act of Parliament which enabled the Executive Government to make Regulations for special districts. It was quite true that this Bill did apply nominally to the whole of the Panjáb, but as a fact it only came into operation in certain districts which were proclaimed by the Government of the Panjáb with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, and those were no doubt the very districts to which the Act of Parliament would apply. In that respect therefore, the one remedy was certainly as good as the other. But he had all along fully admitted that the procedure of the proposed law was extremely exceptional and peculiar. It was in fact a kind of coercion Bill. He thought therefore that, as being an exceptional measure, he would not say it was more prudent, but more courteous to the public, to give an opportunity of discussing the principle and operation of the measure in Council, than to bring it into force at once by proclamation in the Gazette; and as the law was one which had been adopted and fully approved by this Council before, it seemed to him the natural, almost the inevitable, course to re-introduce it in this Council.

The Hon'ble Sir ARTHUR HOBHOUSE said:—"As I have been personally appealed to by my hon'ble friend Mr. Cockerell to say if I think this kind of jurisdiction is a proper jurisdiction to give to Magistrates in the Presidency-towns, I have no hesitation in answering frankly that I do not. But the fact is that the circumstances of the Presidency-towns are very different from the circumstances of the frontier-districts in the Panjáb. The good order which is established in the one is not established in the other. The alterations which were desirable and which we have made in the Presidency-towns, were some moderate, cautious, well-guarded extensions of jurisdiction for the convenience of the public. If we had murderous outrages to deal with, no doubt we should have given much more arbitrary and extensive powers, and we should have placed them in more responsible hands: namely, as regards Calcutta, in the hands of my hon'ble friend the Lieutenant-Governor himself. The fact is that all coercion Acts appear upon their face to be tyrannical or arbitrary; by the very nature of the case they must be arbitrary if they are to work at all, and we must look to their working to see whether they are good laws or bad laws. The first question then is, does this Act answer its purpose? It is clear on the evidence before us that it does. The next question is, does it oppress the people and do they complain? We have not a scrap of evidence to show that during the ten years the Act has been in force any person has come forward to complain of its operation. Therefore I think the case is one in which we should do well to continue that state of things which is working well, and wait to hear complaints before we condemn the law for harshness."

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—"I did not feel justified in interrupting my hon'ble friend, Mr. Cockerell, just now, because I was under the impression that, if he was not going to ask for information, it was perhaps his intention to furnish us with some special information, not in possession of the Government, having regard to this Bill. But I think we are labouring, at present, under this disadvantage, that the discussion raised by my hon'ble friend's remarks is somewhat irregular. Those remarks might, more appropriately, have been made on the occasion of our next meeting, when my hon'ble friend, Sir Edward Bayley, proposes to ask the Council to pass this Bill for renewing the operation of Act XXIII of 1867.

"I may say, however, that one reason why I myself hope the Council will then assent to the request of my hon'ble friend Sir Edward Bayley, is that as far as my own information goes, there are, in my opinion, many exceptional symptoms in the present social condition of our northern frontier which render the abrogation of this Act peculiarly inexpedient just now, notwithstanding the existence of Act 33 of Victoria.

"I therefore trust that at our next meeting we may be able to obtain the assent of the Council to the renewal of this Act."

BRITISH BURMA EMBANKMENT BILL.

Colonel the Hon'ble SIR ANDREW CLARKE moved for leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the execution of emergent works in connection with embankments in British Burma. He said that he found himself also in the position of having to introduce a coercion Bill, but it was somewhat of a different nature from that last under discussion, as it was a Bill to induce those interested in the soil in the Province of British Burma to look after their own property. Since the acquisition of Burma by the British, very large sums of money had been expended under the auspices of the several Chief Commissioners, and especially of his hon'ble friend Mr. Eden, and great improvements in the embankments of the country had been carried out, and the cultivated lands were now comparatively safe from those dangerous floods which so frequently occurred. But at times the floods were more than normal and rose excessively high, and many of these embankments were subject to being breached. And it required immediately a large mass of labour and material to be at the disposal of the Canal officers to check the ravages of the water if allowed to flow uncontrolled and unchecked. But the people of Burma, who had so immensely benefited from these embankments, at a time when their material and labour were necessary, would not give their labour and would not allow their material to be taken for this purpose. Therefore he came to ask the Council to allow him to take special powers to force the people to labour on these embankments, and at the same time to take their material. It was at the same time proposed to give them high wages. The Bill provided for fifteen per cent. being given above the market-rate of the day, and also a percentage above the value of the material. He himself would wish to see that in a case of this sort there should be no excess-payment either for labour or material, because the work was for their own benefit. But he found that there were precedents for such excess-payments in the case of the embankments in Northern India and Madras, and also he believed in Bengal. He would conclude by a quotation to show that he was not asking for an unreasonable power, and also to show what had been the influence of embankment-works in British Burma. He would quote a paragraph from a recent report by Mr. Rivers Thompson after a severe flood.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

N. W. P. LOCAL RATES ACT, 1871, AMENDMENT BILL AND LICENSE BILL.

The Hon'ble Mr. COLVIN moved that the Bill to amend the law relating to assignments from the General Provincial Fund established under the North-Western Provinces Local Rates Act, 1871, be referred to a Select Committee.

He said that, although the question thus brought before the Council related to only one of the two Bills which had been introduced by his hon'ble friend, the Member in charge of the Financial Department on Thursday last, it would perhaps be more convenient, and would also save the time of the Council, if he dealt with them both together in the remarks he was about to make. The two measures which had been thus proposed were both in furtherance of the scheme for throwing on the Local Governments the responsibility of undertaking their own local works,—and for that purpose only. He should not have thought it necessary to say this, but that from certain comments which he had seen and heard, he was under the impression that some people imagined that these Bills were in some way connected with other schemes, such as alterations of the customs-tariff, and with further financial changes which had been mentioned by his hon'ble friend on that occasion, and not solely with a view to the extension of provincial responsibility for public works. He wished to remove this misapprehension as far as he could. These Bills, with which he had been connected from the commencement, related solely and entirely to the extension of the provincial system to the management of public works. The first of the two measures introduced for this object was one which would enable the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces to appropriate a certain portion of the funds under the Local Rates Act towards works of general provincial utility. The principle of applying these funds in such a way was already recognized in the Act, as any part of the assignment made to these districts, which might remain unexpended, might be appropriated to the benefit of the North-Western Provinces generally. The proceeds of all rates levied under it were also thrown into a general provincial fund. Besides this, the Lieutenant-Governor had power, under a certain section of the Act, to apportion the cost of any work which might benefit one or more districts among the districts which were thus benefitted. All that the Bill now before the Council proposed to do, was to extend these powers expressly to the case of such canals and railways as had been declared, with the sanction of His Excellency in Council, to be works of general provincial utility—that was to say, works which came within the spirit and intention, if not within the actual letter, of the existing law. The powers conferred by the Bill would be purely optional. It was hoped by the enhancement of the profits from those works which were reproductive, by further taxation (to which he would allude presently), and by other modes of improving its income which were open to it, that the Local Government would perhaps be able to undertake the charges which had been laid upon it, without having recourse to this measure at all. In any case, and supposing that the Local Government required this assistance, the amount which it was empowered to take was limited to ten per cent. upon the total sum levied. The remaining ninety per cent. would leave an ample margin to meet all charges on account of the grants which had at present to be made by the Local Government. The changes made by this Bill were so trifling that they did not appear to him to require any further remark.

He would proceed now to the License-tax, which it was in contemplation to impose in the North-Western Provinces. When first the scheme for placing local works under the control of the Local Government was suggested, and it became evident that further funds would be necessary, a number of the most experienced officers in the North-Western Provinces had been consulted as to the best way of raising that money. There was a general unanimity in the opinions given by all the officers who were consulted. In the first place there was a strong and general disinclination to add any thing to the burdens already borne by the agricultural classes. There was also a universal conviction that it was both just and expedient to tax the non-agricultural community. As was well known, that community contributed at present remarkably little to the public revenue, except in such towns as paid an octroi-duty. At the same time the non-agricultural classes were amongst those who benefitted especially from the class of works which it was now proposed to transfer to the Local Government. In the case of any famine or scarcity, the first and greatest pressure of the calamity almost always fell on the poorer classes living in towns. It seemed only reasonable then that, when canals and railways were provided, which by ensuring the supply of food, and providing the means of transport for it, and thereby greatly diminishing, if not wholly averting, the danger of famine, those particular classes that most especially benefitted from these works should at least contribute something towards their cost. As to the mode of levying contributions from them, there was a general consensus of opinion that the best form would be that of a License-tax. It was accordingly in this shape that it was now proposed to levy the tax. The Bill now before the Council borrowed all its principal features from one which had formerly been introduced by Mr. Inglis. That Bill, though it had passed through Committee, never took the shape of law, solely for this reason, that the Local Government of that time discovered that it would be able to meet its financial requirements without having recourse to extra taxation. The present Bill also bore a strong resemblance to one which had been introduced so far back as 1862, when Mr. Laing was in charge of the Financial Department. That Bill, like Mr. Inglis's, was intended to impose a low and fixed rate of fees upon all traders. These two Bills however, namely, the one introduced by Mr. Inglis and that introduced by Mr. Laing, were supplementary to an Income-tax, that is, they were both intended to be in operation simultaneously with an Income-tax. The present Bill differed from them in this respect, that it was the only tax which was to be imposed at present. It resembled them however in the essential point that the necessary addition to the revenue was to be levied by a scale of fixed fees, which it was hoped would do away with the necessity for any minute inquisition into incomes, against which very strong objections had been felt and expressed.

For the purpose of determining the rates at which the fees were to be charged, the whole body of traders had been divided into three broad classes. In this respect the measure followed Mr. Inglis's Bill, as it did also in the grouping of trades under the respective classes. Great pains were said to have been taken at the time to make this classification as complete as it could be, and it seemed the safest course to adopt it as it stood. It was possible of course that in Committee some amendments and improvements might be suggested, but generally the Bill followed the classification of Mr. Inglis's Bill. In one point however, it had been determined in some degree to alter the arrangement of classes which was then made. It had been thought desirable to introduce grades, and to make the scale of fees range over a wider extent than that of the former Bill. The reasons for doing this were, in the first place, that it was necessary to improve the receipts. It was thought that the amount which could be levied by a uniform scale of fees so low as they were originally pitched would be quite insufficient to meet the requirements of the Government, for it was admitted on all hands now that the estimate then made of the probable yield of that tax was greatly overrated. A further reason for introducing grades was this, that with fixed rates of fees each class must be so determined that it should not bear hardly upon the poorest men who came within it. A necessary consequence of this was that the richer men who came within any class would not pay their due proportionate amount unless more than three classes were introduced and grades recognized, which corresponded in some measure with the variations which actually existed in the amount of business and prosperity of different traders. This had accordingly been done, and it was hoped that it would have the effect of making the tax both more equitable and also of producing a larger revenue.

In order to prevent the tax from pressing unduly on any individual, a limit of two per cent. on the net annual earnings had been fixed. But it must be understood distinctly that the limit so fixed was a maximum rate, beyond which the incidence of the tax was not to go. It was not to be a standard for determining the rate at which each person was to be charged. In the case of wealthy traders it certainly would not be an excessive rate, and he for one would be very glad to see a fee imposed upon them which, so far as the law permitted, reached the full maximum of two per cent. But it was beyond dispute that an uniform percentage fell heaviest upon people with low means; that it was easier for a wealthy man to pay two per cent. upon his earnings than it was for a man whose income did not exceed Rs 200 or Rs. 300; and he had reason to believe that, as a matter of fact, the Local Government had no intention of allowing these fees to reach so high a rate as two per cent. on the poorer classes of traders.

A minor change which had been introduced in the present Bill was that an appeal was allowed to the Commissioner. In Mr. Inglis's Bill no appeal had been allowed. But it had been thought desirable, as the amount with which any man could be charged was considerably higher than it was then proposed, to allow of one appeal in case of any person being dissatisfied, so that a petitioner might carry his objections before two separate officers.

Sections 17 and 18 of the Bill had been adopted as they stood from Mr. Inglis's Bill. They were inserted there with the intention of utilizing Municipalities in the collection of taxes, and it had been thought that they might be found useful for this purpose now. They had accordingly been retained, and it would be a matter for the discretion of the Local Government to avail itself of them, or not, as might be found convenient.

He had now noticed the only points in the two Bills which were introduced on Thursday last that seemed to him to require any comment at present. He had only this much further to add, that all that had been done in connection with them had been carried out in communication with the Government of the North-Western Provinces, and that the Lieutenant-Governor had expressed his entire concurrence in the measures they were intended to further, and his cordial approval of the principles contained in the Bills.

The Hon'ble SIR JOHN STRACHEY said:—"My Lord: But for one reason I should have reserved for the close of this debate any observations which it seemed necessary for me to make; but some remarks have fallen from my hon'ble friend, Mr. Colvin, which remind me that it is desirable that I should say a few words to the Council before the debate proceeds. My hon'ble friend appeared to think that there may have been some misunderstanding in regard to the objects with which these Bills have been introduced, and that there has been a feeling in some people's minds that these Bills are connected with measures affecting the customs-tariff which I said the other day that I hoped might be carried out hereafter. I had myself become aware that such an opinion had been expressed, and I wish to take the earliest opportunity which offers itself for removing any misunderstanding which may have arisen. I must say, in the first place, that when I spoke about the possible future abolition of all customs-duties in India, I perhaps did not state in a sufficiently unmistakeable way that I was giving my own personal opinion only. When I dipped into the future and saw the untaxed wares of the world pouring into the free ports of India, I was indulging in the pleasures of my own imagination, and by no means proclaiming the intention of the Government to adopt hereafter the policy which I foreshadowed. The truth is that the subject has never been considered by the Government at all, nor has it been officially before the Government, so far as I know, in any shape whatever.

"I hope that no one will fancy that it has ever entered into my head that all customs-duties can be got rid of within any specific time, or, indeed, within any time to which I can practically look forward, or that the Government is in any way committed to anything by the aspirations which I have expressed. The customs-duties yield about 2½ millions a year, and it is clear that under present circumstances we could not abolish them without imposing heavy fresh taxation in their place, a course which would be, in my opinion, totally unjustifiable, and indeed preposterous. Even for the much smaller object of abolishing the cotton-duties, there has never been any idea of imposing fresh taxation. The Secretary of State, in the last orders which he gave on the subject, distinctly said that, highly as he estimated the importance of removing these duties, he quite agreed with the Government of India in the opinion that it would be inexpedient to impose any new tax for such a purpose. Your Excellency, almost immediately after your arrival in India, spoke in public to the same effect.

"There is only one rule in regard to such matters as this, which, consistently with prudence and good financial administration, can be followed, and I hope that the Government will be guided by it in future. This rule was laid down by the Secretary of State in the despatch to which I have just referred in a passage which I will read to the Council: 'All important remisssions of taxation,' he wrote, 'especially in India, in which country the revenue is liable to sudden fluctuations, and the margin between revenue and expenditure is usually small, should proceed upon the most careful estimates, and be undertaken with caution and deliberation; but for this very reason it appears to me that where the revenue is so considerable as in the present case, gradual reduction, which can in a serious and unforeseen emergency be suspended, is a safer and more prudent policy than total and final remission.'

"The policy thus laid down by Her Majesty's Government is the policy which I hope to see carried out.

"I said the other day that, in this matter of the cotton-duties, I believed the interests of England and India to be identical, and I am confident that if we act cautiously and gradually in the manner which the Secretary of State desired, no Indian interest can possibly be injured, but on the other hand that Indian interests must be greatly benefited. But I certainly could not say this, if the abolition of these duties involved the imposition of fresh and unwelcome taxation. The Government would, in my opinion, obviously neglect the paramount duty which, as their natural guardian, it owes to the people of India, if it consented to any such transaction.

"I endeavoured in my Financial Statement to show that while the total expenditure of the Empire showed no tendency to increase, every great source of income had been steadily advancing; that the total nett revenue in 1875-76, the last year for which we have complete accounts, was more than two millions sterling in excess of what it had been seven years before, and that it had increased at an average rate of about £300,000 a year. Considering that the total amount of the cotton-duties is only £850,000, and that only gradual remission is aimed at, there is nothing sanguine in the anticipation that we shall soon be able to take a first step in dealing with them.

"The object with which the Bills now before the Council have been introduced is that, and that only, which has been stated by my hon'ble friend, Mr. Colvin: we require these measures to enable us to carry out in the North-Western Provinces a great financial reform,—that of enforcing local and provincial responsibility for meeting the cost of works undertaken for the benefit of local and provincial interests: this is the practical question now before the Council.

"I wish now, my Lord, to take this opportunity of making a little personal confession. I am afraid that I am one of those people who are inclined to express their opinions in somewhat strong and plain language, and who do not always show sufficient consideration for the opinions of others. When I read over in cold blood the remarks which I made the other day about the cotton-duties, I found in them an illustration of what I have now said. Considering that only a year ago Lord Northbrook, for whom, both on personal and public grounds, I have the highest regard and respect, and many of the Members of this Council towards whom I hold the same feelings, stated on behalf of the Government of India opinions on this subject very different from my own, it would have been wiser and in better taste if my remarks had been couched in less aggressive language. I hope that if any member of the Council has felt this too, he will accept my present confession and apology."

The Hon'ble MAHÁRÁJÁ JOTÍNDRA MOHAN TAGORE said that he did not wish to enter into the details, nor to discuss the various principles, raised in the Budget-Statement; but he would beg leave simply to invite attention to one or two points connected with the decentralization scheme, which he thought formed one of the main features of the Financial Statement. The theory of decentralization was certainly sound in principle; but the present scheme, in his humble judgment, did not go sufficiently far. While certain sources of revenue were made over to the Local Government, certain liabilities were thrown upon them, which would necessitate the imposition of fresh local taxation. Now taxes, whether called local or imperial, as the hon'ble member in charge of the Finances had himself admitted, would press upon the people all the same. If he might be so permitted, he would remark that the proposed system of Local Finance was like the Thíkadári system known in Bengal Zamíndáris, only the arrangement seemed to be based upon less favourable terms; for the Thíkadár generally paid to the Zamíndár less than the gross assets he derived from the land, and was allowed to enjoy all prospective profits during his incumbency, whereas the Local Government, under the decentralization scheme, was required not only to make good to the Imperial Government the full amount of the receipts from the different sources of revenue assigned, but also to make over a moiety of the increase during the period of the contract. If justice was to be done to the Local Governments under the decentralization scheme, he thought the only way to do it would be to adopt the course indicated by Lord Canning in his Resolution of the 11th November 1861. Speaking of Bengal, in which he naturally felt the greatest interest, he begged to observe that it yielded the largest amount of revenue, while its provincial expenditure came up to about one-third of the gross income. Making proportionate deductions from certain revenues, such as opium and customs, to which other provinces had a legitimate claim, there was still left a large surplus, which went to make up for the deficiencies of the less-paying provinces; and yet it was proposed to levy fresh taxes. This, he submitted, was not fair or just to Bengal. It had often been urged that, as Bengal was blessed with a permanent settlement, and as her land-revenue could not be increased, it ought to be made to pay in other ways. Those who averred this forgot that in no other part of India was indirect taxation more productive than in Bengal, and that, to use the words of His Grace the Duke of Argyll, Her Majesty's Secretary of State in 1870, "in the greater fruitfulness of indirect taxation and some direct taxes in Bengal, as compared with other provinces, the Government recovers some portion of the revenue which it has sacrificed in the form of land-assessment." And this was exactly the result which was expected by that far-seeing statesman who introduced the permanent settlement. He wished to add one word with regard to compulsory rates for irrigation. No doubt the principle was sound, that those who benefited by the work ought to pay for it; but it so happened that in Bengal the canals did not supply the water when it was most needed; for the rivers being dry during a season of drought the canals which were fed by the rivers became necessarily dry also, and during the rains, when the canals were full, there was rarely any necessity of supply from them for irrigation. It would be very hard to impose a permanent tax on the people for works of which the benefit was so very uncertain. He believed it was for this, among other reasons, that the Secretary of State once disallowed a law imposing a tax of this nature; and if the Government should revert to the same policy within so short a time, he respectfully submitted that the effect upon the people would be anything but assuring.

The Hon'ble MR. BULLEN-SMITH said that in supporting the Bills just laid before the Council by the hon'ble member on his right, it would be readily supposed that, from his constant residence in Lower Bengal, he could not bring any special information to their consideration; and he might well give a silent vote in their favour, but for two reasons: 1*st*, having had the honour of a seat in this Council when the decentralization-scheme had first been launched under the presidency of His Excellency's lamented predecessor, Lord Mayo, and having given his cordial adherence to that measure as one which in his judgment formed a turning point in modern finance, he was the more pleased to give his support to a Bill which, like the first of the two introduced, was in further development of that system; and he was also glad of the opportunity to express the pleasure with which he had heard the hon'ble gentleman now at the head of the Financial Department, who had himself so largely shared in the initiation of the policy of decentralization, declare that, after a thorough examination of the working of that measure during the seven years in which it had been in operation, he was able to announce to the Council and to the public that its results were entirely satisfactory. His second reason for abstaining from a mere silent vote on the present occasion was that he desired to avail himself of the opportunity, which he understood it to be His Excellency's wish this day's discussion should afford, of making a few comments on the Financial Statement that had been delivered before this Council on Thursday last.

He had listened to this statement with the utmost pleasure, satisfaction and interest; more so, he thought he might safely say, than to any previous Financial Statement which he had heard delivered in this place. He thanked the hon'ble gentleman for his frankness; he admired the statement for its boldness, and he particularly rejoiced to find in it not mere clerkly manipulation of figures, but a strong and well-defined grasp of what he considered sound financial principles, which he could not doubt would ultimately secure to His Excellency's financial policy that success which it deserved. The field over which the Statement travelled was large and varied; but he did not purpose troubling the Council with any lengthy remarks, but merely noticing a few of the points which were of most interest to those who, like himself, were engaged in mercantile pursuits, and whom he might perhaps in some degree be held to represent in this Council. Regarding opium, he accepted with thankfulness the hon'ble member's declaration that he would, on the earliest possible day after the termination of certain enquiries now going on, announce the exact quantity which would be offered next year; and he believed that in so doing he would at once serve the interests of the trade and of the Government. For some years past it had been the custom to give such information to a certain extent, although not for such a forward period as was now pointed at; and, he believed, with the happiest results. If during these years the fluctuations in the price of opium had been less frequent and severe than formerly, he considered it to be very much owing to the knowledge possessed of the quantity to be brought forward. So long as Bengal opium was the subject of occasional heavy gambling operations, which were generally initiated from the Bombay side, considerable fluctuations in price must be expected; but apart from such interruptions, the information promised should have a very steadying effect on the market. He wished much that the hon'ble member could have been more reassuring on ways and means. He not only concurred with him in thinking it unsatisfactory, but he considered it also most unfortunate and injurious, that Government had not been able to give more definite information regarding its loans and bill-operations for the coming year. True the present views and estimates of these are mentioned in the Financial Statement; but the note attached, and to which the hon'ble member had most properly drawn prominent attention, took away any value from this declaration, and left all in doubt and uncertainty—conditions which always pressed hardly on business. The limited extent of the markets of India for Government securities, and the fact that there existed here, unlike the great financial centres of Europe, almost no other forms of investment in which bankers and merchants could place their reserves and floating funds, were two circumstances which tended greatly to aggravate the evil of uncertainty in such matters. It was obvious that in view of the announcement made in this Statement, operations in Government securities must for the present be somewhat of a leap in the dark, while the uncertainty about the issue of the Council Bills must tend still more to perplex all concerned as to the future course of exchange, and reduce this all-important class of business to something not unlike gambling. In making these observations, he did not forget that the exchange-difficulties last year had pressed very hardly upon the Government of India in common with other people; and he was also free to admit that undue panic had something to do with the excessive decline which had taken place in the value of the rupee. Nor was he disposed to insist much upon that wisdom which is wise after the event, but he thought it was now generally admitted—and here he desired to speak with all moderation and respect—that a firmer and more consistent handling of the Council Bills last year would have greatly checked and mitigated the evil which the course adopted tended rather to intensify. This being so, he thought he was not asking too much when he expressed the earnest hope that, as Parliament was now in session, the Secretary of State might be at once moved to obtain the statutory borrowing powers, which he required with the least possible delay, and forthwith put the Indian Government in a position to give, as regards the loans and Council Bills for the coming financial year, that definite information which circumstances demanded, and which he believed there was no desire on the part of Government to withhold.

The Financial Statement delivered to the Council last Thursday closed with some interesting remarks on certain fiscal matters, and a vehement denunciation of the existing cotton-duties. He was no lover of trumpets which gave an uncertain sound, and even if he had any such predilection, he knew that he must look elsewhere than to the Hon'ble the Financial Member for such an instrument; but believing that in his remarks on the cotton-duties the hon'ble gentleman had not spoken in his individual capacity, he confessed that he had heard them with surprise and regret, and would have desired more measured utterances. The remarks as made seemed likely to kindle hopes which had no early prospect of accomplishment, and further appeared to indicate that the Government of India was prepared to go to extremes in carrying out the instructions of the Secretary of State on this subject. From what had fallen from the hon'ble member this morning, he was glad to infer that his fears had been groundless, and that on the previous occasion he had been giving utterance rather to the intensity of his own convictions, than speaking in that other and wider sense to which he had alluded. As these cotton-duties were not today before the Council in any practical shape, it was not his intention to enter upon the subject in detail, or to trouble the Council with the reasons which had led him and many others altogether to dissent from the opinion that these duties had a priority of claim over any other form of fiscal relief. He would rather express the hope that, in carrying out the instructions of the Secretary of State, the Government of India would avail itself of the large discretion which these instructions seemed to leave in its hands, and would not, when the opportunity came for making some move towards the removal of these cotton-duties, lose sight of other matters, which although not so much heard of, had even stronger claims to relief. He need not assure the hon'ble member that he would welcome as gladly as himself the free ports to which he looked forward; that he was no lover of these cotton-duties per se; he would even go further, and admit for the sake of argument that they were blots on the Indian fiscal system. But they all knew that there were blots and blots: some so large as to deface and disfigure the parchment; others so small as to be scarcely discernible. It was a question of degree; and so also with these fiscal items. What he asked was, that each should be considered on its merits; and in the meantime he might express his own strong opinion that some of the other items to which he had alluded not only offended more against the theory of fiscal economy than did these cotton-duties, but were also productive of much more evil and mischief in their practical working. As to the proper mode of dealing with this subject, he was not ashamed to say that, both as a member of this Council and as a member of the Tariff Committee, his endeavour had been to look at it mainly from an Indian point of view; and for this reason among others, that he had always felt sure that the English side of the question would be fully put forward by others, and would meet with every consideration from the controlling authority at home before any decision was come to. In saying this, he hoped he need not assure the hon'ble member that he was not one of the foolish people who sneer at Manchester, and he agreed with him that the man was foolish indeed who would attempt to sneer at that great centre of England's manufacturing industry. But human nature was, he took it, much the same in Lancashire as elsewhere; and it was only natural that the men of Manchester had looked, did look, and would continue to look, at these cotton-duties from their own point of view and in the light of their own interests. He did not blame them for so doing, but he could not admit that their interests and those of India were altogether so identical as his hon'ble friend seemed to consider them. Identical they were of course in so far as the interests of England were closely bound up in those of her greatest dependency; identical they were in that the interests of two countries carrying on such a trade as that existing between England and India could not but be closely connected; identical they were, no doubt, in a sort of general way; but it was an identity which, although accepted when stated in the abstract, became more difficult to receive when one entered on details. He would give an instance, taken from the Statement before the Council, where the interests of which he had been speaking were not identical. The hon'ble member in his Statement had given a graphic sketch of the customs-hedge which ran across a great tract of Northern India, and had unsparingly pointed out its many evils. If that hedge were abolished tomorrow, no man in England would find himself happier or better off in any respect; while in India, from the very day of its abolition, harassment, extortion and petty tyranny would be saved to many. Then again, Lancashire needed no help from here to fight her cause. The men of Manchester were strong and wealthy and united; they wielded powerful political influence, and probably inspired more than any other body, that pressing terror without the salutary influence of which, the Secretary said a few weeks ago, when speaking to the Associated Chambers of Commerce, he did not know what would become of the reform of Indian finance. He had therefore, as he had said before, always felt quite sure that the Manchester view of these cotton-duties would be well pressed, and had deemed it the more incumbent upon himself to view them from the Indian standpoint, to ascertain what was likely to be most equitable and beneficial to the people and trade of this country, and to decide accordingly. With these remarks he begged to tender his support to the two Bills before the Council.

The Hon'ble MAHÁRÁJÁ NARENDRA KRISHNA said that they had heard the able and lucid Financial Statement read at the last meeting of this honourable Council. It would be impracticable to dwell at length on the various items contained in it, and he would therefore confine his remarks to certain very important points. The Government of India wished to raise the amount of six and a half millions by loans, to be contracted here or in England, or partly in both countries. Such a large amount would not have been required if the finances had not been affected by the terrible famines raging in the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras, and by the charges required for extraordinary Public Works. This was certainly a matter of regret; but over the former cause there could be no human control, and as regarded the latter an economical management was promised. The people of India were very much indebted to His Excellency for not recommending the imposition of the obnoxious Income-tax to meet the deficiency. It was stated that certain existing taxes would have been touched, but had not been interfered with on account of the famines. It was contemplated to equalise and reduce the salt-duties, to abolish the inland customs-lines and the sugar-duties, and the import-duties on cotton-goods. In the absence of any data of the amount of the proposed reduction of salt-duties, if they took the amount of revenue derived from the other two sources to be about a million, they would have to lose an income far above one million, to recoup which it was feared some new form of taxation would hereafter be imposed upon the people. It would however be premature to dwell on such subjects, which were not now taken in hand; but he would only point out that, although nothing could be said as to the abolition of all protective duties as a general principle, he might observe that all principles should not necessarily be acted upon simply because they were good and sound, without a due regard to their adaptability to the times and the circumstances of the people. The cotton-industries, through the aid of steam-machineries just born in the different parts of India, required the fostering care of the British Government for their development, and it was on that account a matter of serious consideration whether the abolition of these duties would not stifle them at their birth, not to mention that it was still a doubtful question whether the particular customs-duty was of a protective character. It was declared that an extension of the existing form of provincial taxation was to be made for carrying out local improvements. The people however believed that their able and wise Lieutenant-Governor could devise means to raise the twenty-seven and a half lákh of rupees required for the carrying out of the proposed improvements more by the curtailment of expenditure and the development of the productive resources of the country, than by the extension of the existing taxes.

The Hon'ble MR. COWIE said:—"MY LORD,—As I have no special exceptions to take to the Financial Statement before us, my observations upon it will be very brief, and perhaps therefore the more acceptable.

"I congratulate the Hon'ble Member that he has happily managed to steer clear of the imposition of an Income-tax, in which I think he is the more to be praised, inasmuch as he does not disguise his admiration of that mode of raising Indian revenue.

"If one could eliminate from that statement the cost of that terrible famine, I feel bound to admit that the year's estimate of income and expenditure would have been both satisfactory and encouraging.

"That cost, we are told, is to be met by loans to be raised partly in India and partly in England. When money here is worth 10 per cent. and at home 2½ per cent., there should primâ facie be no doubt as to which is the better country where to borrow; but then comes in that very difficult problem, called the silver-question, which casts grave doubts upon the expediency of India borrowing English gold, when she can pay the interest of it only in a very depreciated silver-currency.

"It is possible that the suggestion of borrowing in each country arises in the desire, if I may use the expression, to hedge this very grave difficulty.

"In the case of borrowing in England, there is this singular anomaly. It is matter of notoriety, that the most impecunious Government in the world may go into the London money-market and borrow to the extent of the credulity of lenders, but the Empire of India cannot do so without a special Act of Parliament, and from what fell from the Hon'ble Member last week, it would seem that even that concession cannot with certainty be calculated upon.

"In connexion with the proposed loans, I think bankers and merchants have cause to complain of the very remarkable vagueness as to time, place and circumstance which accompanied the statement of the Finance Minister, that 3¾ millions would probably be raised at home and 2½ millions in this country. In point of fact it came to this, that notwithstanding those figures were named, the Government of India will borrow when and where they please.

"I congratulate the Hon'ble Member on his broad and liberal utterances in regard to the salt-tax, the Inland Customs-duties and the Import-duties on cotton-manufactures. On this last-named item I will say nothing, as my esteemed friend, the Hon'ble Mr. Bullen Smith, has just now so ably handled the subject. When hearing the Hon'ble Sir John Strachey last week draw a picture, to which distance lent enchantment, of the day when the ports of this vast Empire should be free to the commerce of the world, I thought it was somewhat Utopian, but imagined he was only setting up a high standard of excellence, of which, if not the whole, a part might some day be realized; but in his explanation of to-day, he has removed all the varnish from that picture, by stating that he was merely revelling in imagination. At my time of life I cannot hope to see that consummation, but I very cordially trust the Hon'ble Member may."

The Hon'ble MR. HOPE said that, before noticing the two Bills which were now under the consideration of the Council, he proposed to offer a few remarks on the Budget Statement which had been presented on the last occasion when the Council met, although he was well aware that, but for His Excellency the President's indulgence, he should be out of order in doing so. He would in the first place express the great relief and satisfaction which he felt, and which he believed was shared by all who gave any attention to such matters, at learning from his friend, the Hon'ble Sir J. Strachey, that in respect of Public Works Extraordinary, the cloud which they had seen lowering in the horizon at the time of Sir William Muir's Financial Statement last year, and which had darkened over their heads with momentary threats of bursting in August last, had to all appearance passed away; and that these works were not to be further checked or indefinitely postponed. The importance of these Extraordinary Works, whether railways or canals, or others of a special nature, had not been, MR. HOPE was quite certain, one whit overrated by the hon'ble member; and he was sure that Sir John Strachey must share with him, though he might not feel at liberty to express it, the disappointment he experienced on learning that the condition of the finances did not allow of the assignment of a larger sum than two millions and a half towards these objects. In connection with this subject, he would invite attention to the opposite side of the shield to that which the hon'ble member had presented to them. The hon'ble member had given a very graphic sketch of the enormous increase of wealth and prosperity, and the other incalculable benefits, which canals and railway had conferred upon the country. He would invite them to remember the loss, past and still continuing, to trade, and the more confined increment in the national wealth, which resulted from delay in the prosecution of these undertakings on a larger scale than hitherto. The hon'ble member had also pointed out that, but for railroads, the people now suffering from famine in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies would be dying of starvation by hundreds of thousands. He would recall to their minds the painful memory of the hundreds of thousands who did die in Rájputána in 1869, for want of the railway through that province the construction of which had been so long vainly urged. On the whole, he was inclined to think that, considering the importance of these works and the vast interests involved, it would be justifiable in any case in which the fact that a work would pay was undoubted, to push it on even at a greater rate than financial prudence according to their present principles would permit. He was not at all sure that it would not be right to construct such a work with the utmost rapidity, debiting to capital if need be the interest during construction, and even for two or three years later, in full confidence that the earlier use would in a variety of ways, indirect and direct, square the account, rather than to spread its execution over a series of years, to postpone it indefinitely because there was no surplus-income, or to relegate it to forecasts which, as the hon'ble member had shown, were constantly liable to be falsified by new circumstances, and which only seemed to be brought forward to cause disappointment and tantalization. In connection with this, and with both the doubts which were entertained as to the possibility of raising sufficient capital in India, and the importance, on which the hon'ble member had just dwelt, of raising as much of it as possible in India instead of in England, he would venture to throw out the suggestion whether raising money in India would not sometimes be facilitated if loans were to be recognized as being intended for particular works. As a case in point, he would take this very Rájputána Railway. He thought it highly probable that, if for the construction of this railway there were a separate loan, many merchants in Bombay who had one reason or another for being interested in the line, and expected their trade to benefit by it, would be ready to subscribe with the view of getting it constructed, although they would otherwise never have thought of investing their money in Government paper. The princes, again, through whose territories the railways would pass, might with propriety be invited, and would no doubt accept the invitation, to place at the disposal of Government for investment in it a considerable portion of their balances, instead of leaving them to remain unused by lákhs and lákhs in their several treasuries as at present. He would now pass on to the subject of exchange and the so-called depreciation of silver. He observed that the hon'ble member had stated that their loss by exchange was "one element which may be said to be practically altogether beyond our control." In another place he had said that "we cannot with any confidence expect to avoid serious loss hereafter from disturbances in the relative values of the precious metals." No doubt a question of this magnitude had most fully engaged the mind of the hon'ble gentleman, and MR. HOPE did not question that, in speaking as he had done, the hon'ble member had only exercised the caution which was due and necessary for one in his position, and felt sure that at the proper time the decision of the Government would be formally announced, together with the reasons for it. MR. HOPE had not the slightest desire to precipitate that decision, or to complain of the non-announcement of it on the present occasion; still less was it his object to attempt to extract any declaration on the subject. But he would say that, although there were occasions when the strength of a Government might be to sit still, he did not think that this was one of them. The British Empire was interested in the silver question as much as any nation in the world—in fact more so, in consideration of the special double life which it possessed, a life both European and Indian. The English nation had in England an enormous debt, contracted and payable in gold. It had likewise there a vast manufacturing industry for export, which depended in a great measure on the ability of the silver-using nations with which it dealt to pay for its products. Here in India, on the other hand, it had a heavy debt to defray in gold, while all its assets were raised in silver. Thus if there were any serious rise in the value of gold, such as he for one believed had taken place, rather than a fall in the value of silver, England must suffer both at home in her debt-obligations and her current commerce, and in India by the depreciation of the national—he meant in the sense of Indian national—capital, which was almost entirely in silver, by the increased weight of the obligations which she had to meet in gold, and by the decrease in the value of her means of meeting them. He believed it therefore to be entirely the interest of England, whether in England or in India, to have as large a circulating medium as possible, and one which should embrace both gold and silver as a full legal tender. It would be gathered from what he had said that he was one of that minority—and he must admit with regret that they were at present a rather small minority—who were in favour of bi-metallism. So long ago as August last, after studying everything on the subject which was within his reach, he had written privately to his friend, Mr. Chapman the Financial Secretary, that he could come to no other conclusion than that that system was the right one. He believed it was quite possible for Government to fix a ratio between gold and silver after due enquiry, and that it was just as much the duty of Government to do so as to take any other measures for the protection of the community. No doubt such a step could not be taken without an understanding with other nations. But if they were to wait till all nations agreed on the subject, or till they could get together a sort of universal conference, they might have to wait for ever.

England however had no need to stand by in the hope that other nations would come forward and pull her chestnuts out of the fire, and it was undignified for her to do so. It seemed to him that to come to an understanding with the Latin union—that was to say, principally with France—was all that was required, and that we might then safely leave the rest of the nations to follow—or rather the course of events would oblige them to follow—in the line which we ourselves had adopted. He was very well aware that the subject of which he was treating was an exceedingly difficult one, and there might be a certain savouring of presumption in his speaking on it. This was not the time to argue out the whole matter, and he merely made these remarks in order to give utterance to the anxiety which both he and others felt that the Government should take up the subject, and at the same time to express their confidence that no one could be more competent to do so than the hon'ble member in charge of the finances. It might be that if his own disposition had been more angelic, he might have feared to tread these mazes; but being what he was, he could only say—Liberavi animam meam.

He now passed on to another subject—to the decision to treat as ordinary expenditure the cost of both famines and unproductive public works. The reasons for this course had been so clearly and forcibly stated by the hon'ble member, that the only wonder seemed to be that these items had ever been treated in any other manner. It might perhaps be necessary in some cases to borrow money for items which would thus be classed as ordinary; but he presumed that any money borrowed under such circumstances would be all brought directly into the ordinary charges of the year, and accepted if necessary, as bonâ fide deficit. He had only one other remark to make in connection with this subject. The Hon'ble Member had said that "if a work has been classed as extraordinary, and it be ascertained subsequently that the estimates of profit were fallacious, any further expenditure upon it shall not be treated as extraordinary, but entered among the ordinary charges." His hon'ble friend had not however said what he would do in the converse case which would arise if a work like the Northern Panjáb Railway, which was commenced for military purposes and classed as ordinary, after a time paid its expenses. He presumed that in such a case the course which would be followed would be, not to carry the receipts to the ordinary currente revenu of the year, but that they would be treated as an addition to the annual amount which it was thought desirable and safe to set aside as interest on loans for reproductive enterprises. At the same time it was not quite clear as to what were the Hon'ble Member's intentions in such a case.

The hon'ble member had, MR. HOPE went on to say, made several remarks and announcements in his Financial Statement with reference to salt, sugar and customs. It was not clear at the time, nor was it perfectly clear now, although the Hon'ble Member had endeavoured to make it so, which of these were his own opinions, and which carried with them the weight of the Government of India. In some of those remarks MR. HOPE most heartily concurred; but with regard to others he could not go further than to admit that, when the orders of Her Majesty's Government had been definitely and clearly given, they were bound to afford to them a loyal and unhesitating obedience. With respect to all those remarks and announcements, both those in which he concurred and those from which he was disposed to differ, he did not feel bound to make any detailed statements or criticisms, because there was no specific measure regarding them before the Council at the present time.

He now came to the very important question of decentralization; and here he would express his unfeigned satisfaction that it had been decided to crown the work which had been commenced during the Viceroyalty of the late Lord Mayo, and that the intention to do so had been set forth in terms which were sufficient to carry conviction to every reasonable mind. The measures which came under this head were, as he understood, three in number. The first consisted in transferring certain heads of revenue to the Local Governments, and increasing the number of heads of expenditure which were under their control. There could be no doubt that the want of revenue out of which to meet the growing necessities of the country in all departments had been most seriously felt by the Local Governments during the period for which the decentralization-system, so far as it had hitherto gone, had been tried; and as one who had been long ago a district officer, MR. HOPE could testify that this was a difficulty which had met him at almost every turn. The difficulty would to a great extent be removed by the present arrangement, under which a portion of the increased revenue was to be retained by the Local Governments, and the question of the proportion of the division of profits had been rightly kept open and made subject to revision at short periods. On this head he had nothing further to say than to express his own private opinion—of course he had no authority to express any on behalf of the Government of Bombay—that arrangements similar to those which were about to be carried out in the North-Western Provinces could be elaborated without any difficulty whatever for the Presidency of Bombay.

With regard to the second head—that was, the transfer to Local Governments of the responsibility for Extraordinary Public Works which were primarily of local and provincial utility—he thought there could be no doubt of the correctness of the principle that they should be so transferred. At the same time he anticipated considerable difficulty in its application, especially in the case of new works in future. They all knew that the distinctions which existed between provincial and local charges were purely artificial. The main idea he presumed was, that all the members of a community should pay alike for the measures which affected their security, and for the development of their common interests; but that special needs and special luxuries which were found to exist, or to be necessary, in any part of a country should be paid for by the persons whom they most concerned. For instance, here in Calcutta—more strictly speaking he should perhaps say at Simla—the Imperial Government found the police for the protection of the station; but if a man wanted a special policeman to watch his house, he would be called upon to pay for it himself. That idea had already been largely applied in the case of municipalities and local funds throughout India with the most satisfactory results. They found these bodies already everywhere providing for peculiar local wants, and also ready to pay for local luxuries, which the State at large was neither bound to furnish nor able to afford. The difficulty however which would arise in the practical application of this principle in the cases now contemplated, was that there were many measures of which it was extremely doubtful whether they could be said to be primarily of local or provincial utility. Taking for instance, as an illustration, some of the canals which had been mentioned the other day, it might be argued, and probably with truth as regards a certain amount of the charge, that their cost was fairly debitable to the Imperial Government, which derived a large revenue from the land, and that the canal was constructed just as much for the security of that revenue as for the human, purpose of preserving the people from famine. Again, there were many more projects of which the benefit was extremely doubtful. There were numerous projects all over India cut and dried in the possession of their worthy friends of the Public Works Department and there was always considerable pressure to carry forward such schemes. He did not say that they were not carefully matured, and that in the honest opinion of their promoters they had not advantages which they would consider of sufficient importance to warrant their being carried out; but he doubted whether many of them would be held by the people at large to be of any benefit at all. He had in his mind at the present moment one scheme which had been on the tapis for some fifteen years. It was an irrigation-canal, which was to cost half a million of money, and to go through a country which was already almost a garden in agriculture; and the sole end to be attained was that a large proportion of the land which was now paying a very heavy land revenue might hereafter pay three or four rupees an acre more. He did not think that such a scheme would be approved of by the people or that the cost of it should be put upon them.

As regards how far the Local Governments were to be trusted in these matters, the argument cut both ways. Although it was true that, if they had to find the money, they might be more careful how they spent it, on the other hand it was also true that the facility of starting great projects almost at pleasure might make them forgetful of the serious difficulty of providing funds for them, which would usually have to be borne by their successors in office. The sum and substance of all he had said was this, that although the principle appeared a thoroughly sound and proper one, and one which he hoped would be carried out within all safe limits, it seemed to be one over the practical application of which the Government of India would have to exercise a severe and constant check.

As regarded the imposition of famine-charges on the provinces afflicted with famine, he thought the hon'ble member had wisely deferred announcing any decision on the present occasion. As they had now in the first place a very heavy famine going on in two provinces, and were not in a position to know what the views of the Local Governments were on the subject, any decision would now perhaps have been premature; and there were moreover a number of considerations affecting the famine in those particular provinces which might not apply to future famines.

He would now pass on to notice the two Bills which had been brought forward, and he was afraid that the Council would be apt to consider that his remarks on them bore the same proportion to the rest of his speech which the bread bore to the sack on a certain well-known convivial occasion. It appeared to him that the License Bill would fill in the North-Western Provinces a blank which existed more or less all over India as regards the taxation of the non-agricultural classes.

As to the structure of the Bill, he was glad to see that it was framed on the principle of large and well-defined jumps in the rates which were to be imposed. It was extremely difficult—in fact next to impossible—to judge whether a man's income was £70 or £75; but it was comparatively easy to say whether he should pay a certain sum or twice as much. He had no doubt that the gradation of rates which had been adopted in the Bill would very materially facilitate the just application of the tax, and would aid in commending it to the favourable reception of the community.

As regarded the other Bill, it was, so far as he understood, a transfer of a part of an existing burden from one hand to another; and if the Government of the North-Western Provinces considered it a proper transfer—of which MR. HOPE held them to be the best judges—there need be no further objection in this Council to their views being carried out.

To these remarks he would only add, in conclusion, his hope that both these Bills would be approved by the Council, and passed at an early date.

Colonel the Hon'ble Sir ANDREW CLARKE said: "My Lord,—The Budget of last year with a written statement reviewing it, prepared by the Member of Council in charge of the Finances of India, was followed by the publication of a detailed departmental review of the estimates for Public Works for the same period.

"This year your Lordship has decided to have the announcement of the Budget for the coming year reviewed orally in open Council, and with your Excellency's assent, I will follow the precedent afforded by former proceedings in this Chamber, and will offer some explanations as to the present phase, the progress and the prospects, of the great interest and resources with which I am personally charged.

"Adhering to the form adopted last year, I would first observe that it has not yet been found convenient or practicable to include the grants from Provincial Services and Local Funds for Public Works, nor the estimated receipts and expenses of the Port-trusts at Calcutta and Bombay, nor the Harbour-works at Madras. The expenditure from Municipal funds on Public Works and on loans to Corporations, and the receipts and expenses of the Light Railways under the Government, North-Western Provinces, as also the expenditure on Public Works by Public Works Officers from contributions, cannot be brought under consideration, because the materials for the purpose are still wanting. Consequently these observations do not embrace the whole field of the operations of the Department. Endeavours will be made to obtain the materials required for a comprehensive summary of the entire receipts and expenditure on Public Works, whether controlled directly or supervised indirectly by the State, in time for the next annual review. I will now confine myself to dealing with the facts and estimates relating to the receipts and expenses from Imperial funds and to guaranteed undertakings included in the Imperial accounts.

"The amounts then to be dealt with are:—

The estimate of receipts for 1877-78, which provides for a sum of ...	11,697,500
And an expenditure amounting to	13,485,160
Making a Grand Total of	25,182,660
Of the sum shown under receipts, the amount expected to be received from rents and other miscellaneous receipts from buildings classed as Imperial, from the Warora Collieries, from fees from students of the Civil Engineering Colleges at Cooper's Hill and Roorkee, and from the Press at Roorkee, is ...	92,100
From water-rates and other miscellaneous receipts of irrigation-works, excluding the share of the land-revenue ascribed to such works, the receipts are likely to be	551,600
The revenue of the Telegraph Department, both Indian and Indo-European, is expected to amount to	315,500
And the revenue from State Railways to	674,800
So that the direct Imperial receipts that will be accounted for in the Public Works Department aggregate	1,634,000
The credits to Capital Account of Guaranteed Railways by transfer to revenue are taken at	1,510,200

From the earnings of the several Guaranteed Railways there is expected to be received	8,540,800
And from the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company ...	12,500
These several items make up the total of	11,697,500

"The average Miscellaneous receipts of the three years ending with 1875-76 have been £80,663, for 1876-77 the receipts are estimated to amount to £84,000, and in 1877-78 to £92,100. The anticipated increase in the revenue of 1877-78, as compared with the average receipts of previous years and with the probable income of 1876-77, is chiefly due to the receipts from the Warora Collieries, being now taken at £18,100, as against £5,700 in 1876-77. This will just pay the cost of working expenses.

"I view the future of these collieries, with iron-ore in their vicinity, as a subject of great importance, and of this the present Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces is keenly sensible.

"The sums under this head also include the fees from the students of the Royal Civil Engineering College, Cooper's Hill. These receipts are not sufficient to pay the working expenses of the Institution, on which there is a deficit of £4,300. The expenses, not including first cost and additions to buildings, are £24,000; the receipts £19,700; a deficit of but little importance or significance, once admitting that the principle of such an establishment is the right one. The receipts for the Rurkí Press and College are expected to amount to £4,100, of which £600 only is derived from fees of the students; and as the expenses of the College amount to £20,494, the result is a nett deficit of £19,894. But the College is mainly kept up for the training of Upper and Lower Subordinates of the Department, and as these classes of students pay no fee for tuition, the College cannot be expected to pay its expenses. The items of income classed as Miscellaneous necessarily vary from year to year in consequence of the fluctuating nature of the source of the income; the receipts realized are commensurate with cost of buildings rented. I may here notice in the case of the receipts from buildings classed as Provincial, the revenue is credited to Provincial Services. The tolls on lines of roads in cases where such tolls are levied, on the Circular Canals and Nadiya Rivers in Bengal, and on the East Coast Canals in Madras, and generally on such canals as are used for the sole purpose of navigation, are credited to Local Funds, and are at the disposal of the Local Governments concerned for local works.

"The gross direct receipts from Irrigation-works in 1876-77 are expected to amount to £500,700, against an average receipt in the three previous years of £489,880 per annum. In 1877-78 a sum of £551,600 may be realized; so that, as compared with 1876-77, there is likely to be an increase of £50,900. But the receipts in 1876-77 were unduly low in consequence of the favourable rainfall in the Panjáb in the winter of 1876, while in Bengal there was some delay in collecting the full assessments. It may be added that no portion of the expected receipts is to be derived from new canals coming into operation during the year.

"Of the sum of £315,500 set down as the expected receipts from Telegraphs, £241,000 is from the Indian and Ceylon Telegraphs, and the remainder from the Indo-European Telegraph. The average receipts per annum of the three years ending with 1875-76, from the Indian Telegraph Department, have been £204,538, the expected receipts of 1876-77 amount to £236,000, so that the estimate for next year provides for an increase of £5,000.

"In the case of the Indo-European Telegraph no increase can be expected. The average receipts have been £76,668 per annum, the probable receipts of 1876-77, £96,100, while those of 1877-78 are £60,285. The decrease is due to exceptional items of receipt on Capital Account in previous years, and to the opening of the duplicate cable now being laid between Suez and Bombay, which will probably affect the income of the European Telegraph to the extent of £13,900. A further falling-off of £14,215 is due to the payment to the Indo-European Telegraph Company for earnings collected in India on messages home, and anticipated to exceed the sum due by the Company for earnings collected in England on messages out. In other words, the outward messages vid Russia are calculated to be in excess of the inwards due by that route.

"In 1877-78 the gross receipts on State Railways are taken at £674,800, the receipts of 1876-77 being £369,600, and the average actual receipts of the three previous years £153,470 per annum. The increase in receipts of 1877-78, as contrasted with those of 1876-77, will be due to the opening of the Indus Valley, Northern Bengal, and Rangoon and Irrawaddy Valley State Railways, from which there will probably be received £209,300 in all.

"The balance, £95,900, of the increase occurs in the other Railways, namely £35,000 from the Rájputána, £11,100 from the Panjáb Northern, £18,000. from the Holkar State Railway, and £14,700 from the Tirhut State Railway. The increase in the receipts of the last two Railways is partly owing to a larger extent of line being opened.

"At the rate in which the Government accounts are made up, namely, two shillings per rupee, the gross traffic-receipts from Guaranteed Lines of 1877-78 are expected to amount to £8,540,800, the probable receipts of 1876-77 being £9,492,600, and the average receipts of the three previous years £8,036,172 per annum. The large revenue of the year 1876-77 is due partly to the increase in the traffic caused by the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi, and greatly to the famine in Madras and Bombay. But the growth of the export-trade in seed and grains has also added to the traffic, and this will, I trust, still largely increase, and be a permanent source of income to our railways and of greatly extended prosperity to the whole Empire and its peoples.

"The scarcity in Madras has improved slightly the income of the Madras Irrigation Company. In 1873-74 the receipts were £4,633, in 1874-75 £4,193, and in 1875-76 £6,620. In 1876-77 they are expected to be £7,000, and in 1877-78 £12,500.

"Excluding the items of receipt on Capital Account of Guaranteed Railways, which to a great extent have to be deducted from the expenditure side of the account, the total sum due to the operations of the Department and carried to the credit of the Imperial Revenues is £9,915,000, the expected receipts in 1876-77 being £10,786,000, so that there is a decrease of £871,000. The decrease under Guaranteed Railways, due chiefly to the operation of the famine, is £1,224,100, so that under other heads there is an increase of £353,100. Of this increase, £8,100 falls under Revenue Miscellaneous, and £50,900 under Revenue Irrigation. Under State Railways the increase is £305,200, and in the receipts from the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company £5,500. On the other hand, the receipts from Telegraphs show a decrease of £16,600.

"Turning to expenditure, the aggregate of £13,485,160 is thus made up—

Grant from Ordinary Imperial funds for expenditure on Public Works (exclusive of the portion given to Provincial Services)	2,563,950
Provision for expenditure on Telegraphs	495,500
Provision for expenditure on State Railways Ordinary, including working expenses	501,110
Provision for land and control for State expenditure on Guaranteed Railways ...	78,000
The total Ordinary grant is thus	3,638,560
Under Extraordinary the provision is	3,628,000
For Capital expenditure of the Guaranteed Railways there is required ...	1,382,000
And for working expenses of the same Railways there is wanted	4,457,800
It is necessary to provide, for payment of surplus-profits to Shareholders of the East Indian, Great Indian Peninsula, Eastern Bengal, and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railways	367,000
And for working expenses of the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company it is necessary to provide	11,800
Making up the total of ...	13,485,160

"The grant for Public Works Ordinary, as contrasted with the Regular Estimate of the current year and the average expenditure of the three previous years, is as follows:—

	Budget Estimate, 1877-78.	Regular Estimate, 1876-77.	Average actual outlay of previous three years ending with 1875-76.
Military Works	1,231,985	1,246,900	1,215,541
Other Services	431,365	392,800	406,049
Irrigation	900,600	958,800	939,970
Imperial Assemblage at Delhi		23,800
	2,563,950	2,626,800	2,561,560

"On the whole, the grant for expenditure is £62,850 less than of 1876-77, and £2,389 more than the average outlay of the previous three years. Of the decrease in 1877-78, as contrasted with 1876-77, £28,300 is due to the exceptional expenditure on the Imperial Assemblage, and £58,200 to a diminution in the grant for Irrigation Works. Under other Services the increase of £38,565 includes the expenditure necessitated on Government of India buildings and water-supply project at Simla.

"The grant for next year for Telegraph, amounting to £495,500, includes a sum of £14,215 of refunds to the Indo-European Telegraph Company, which ought to be really deducted from Revenue, so that virtually the expenditure provided for amounts to only £481,285, the probable expenditure in 1876-77 being £491,800, and the average expenditure of the three previous years £444,816. The nett charge on the Revenues of the State by the operations of the Telegraph is expected to amount to £180,000 in 1877-78, against an average of £162,632 in the previous four years.

"The provision for State Railways under the head of Ordinary is £501,110, against a probable charge of £303,650 for 1876-77. Of this sum, £18,100 is for outlay on surveys, and the remainder for working expenses of the several State Railways. The increase in the charge on the Ordinary Revenue of £197,460 is more than covered by the increase of £305,200 shown as likely to accrue under receipts.

"Of the increase of £197,460 in 1877-78, £169,300 is accounted for by provision having been made for the working expenses of the Indus Valley, Northern Bengal, and Rangoon and Irrawaddy Valley Railways, the receipts from which are expected to aggregate £209,300. A further increase of £48,270 is expected to be incurred on the expenses of the other State Railways from which an increased income of £95,900 is anticipated. On the other hand the provision for outlay on Capital account of surveys has decreased by £20,110.

"The charge for State outlay on Guaranteed Railways is decreasing. The average charge in the three years ending with 1875-76 was £97,048 per annum, In 1876-77 it is expected to be £91,250, while in 1877-78 the provision made is only £78,000.

"The total outlay on Extraordinary Works, Irrigation and State Railways, to end of 1877-78, is expected to amount to close upon £28,000,000. The figures are as follows:—

	Irrigation.	State Railways.	Total.
Actual outlay to end of 1875-76 ...	8,708,195	11,785,492	20,493,687
Probable outlay ... 1876-77 ..	1,012,000	2,788,100	3,800,100
„ „ ... 1877-78 ...	900,000	2,728,000	3,628,000
	10,620,195	17,301,592	27,921,787

"This is called extraordinary outlay, and is all of it treated as being defrayed from borrowed funds, though much of it has been paid out of current revenue.

"The actual charge on the Ordinary revenues for interest on this outlay is estimated at £1,174,850, against £1,007,718 in 1876-77, so that there is an increase in charge of £167,132. Of this increase, £138,500 is met by an increase in revenue, so that the nett increased charge really incurred on the income of 1877-78 by the construction of Extraordinary Works amounts only to £28,632.

"The revenue expense of the Guaranteed Lines is nearly £460,000 less for 1877-78 than for the current year.

The probable charge in 1876-77 being	274,000
And the average charge per annum of the three previous years	226,638

"The increase in the charge for next year is due to the large earnings of 1876-77, whereby the surplus-profits to be paid in 1877-78 have been considerably augmented.

"The provision made for working expenses of the Madras Irrigation Company is £11,800, the probable charge for 1876-77 being £16,400, and the actual charge of the three previous years £16,025.

"Excluding the Capital Account of Guaranteed Railways, the total sum included as grants from Imperial Revenue in 1877-78 is £12,103,160, the probable charge in 1876-77 being £12,524,600, so that there is a decrease of £421,440. The nett decrease in the working expenses of Guaranteed Railways, caused chiefly by the hope of a cessation of traffic for famine-relief, is £462,800, but this may, I am sanguine enough to think, be partially met by the growth of the traffic in wheat for export; especially if our rates of freight can be kept at a minimum, so as to allow of this staple firmly establishing itself in European estimation. The increase under other heads is £41,360. This increase occurs as follows:—

Increase in Telegraph charge		3,700
„ in State Railways Ordinary		197,460
„ in provision for surplus-profits to be paid to shareholders of certain Guaranteed Railways ...		93,000
		294,160
Less decreases under the following heads:—
Public Works Ordinary	62,850
State outlay on Guaranteed Railways	13,250
Public Works Extraordinary	172,100
Madras Irrigation and Canal Company ...	4,600	252,800
		41,360

Excluding Madras, Bombay, Rájputána and Burma, and deducting the construction-outlay on Irrigation-works not yet brought into operation, the total Capital expenditure to end of 1876-77 for works from which revenue is expected to be realised in 1877-78 is ...		10,719,537
The gross direct receipts from these works in 1877-78 is expected to be		518,730
And the working expenses are estimated at		333,863
Leaving the nett revenue at		184,867
The share of land-revenue ascribed to these works is		203,634
So that the nett total revenue is		388,501 and the nett return expected to be derived is 3·7 per cent. of the construction-cost.

"It is desirable to further analyse these figures so as to bring out clearly the sources of the revenue according to the character of the works. Thus there are the two great canals constructed entirely by the British Government —the Ganges Canal and the Bárí Doáb. Singling out these two, as having been in operation for a considerable time, and therefore such as may reasonably be expected to give a fair return, the results are as follows:—

	Ganges Canal.	Baree Doab Canal.	Total.
Probable Capital outlay to end of 1876-77	2,921,381	1,545,221	4,466,602
Nett direct and indirect return expected in 1877-78 ...	186,252	49,817	236,069
Percentage of latter on former...	6·4	3·2	5·2

"Thus these two permanent canals are calculated to return over 5 per cent. on their construction-cost.

"The next group of canals, consisting of the Orissa Project, Midnápur Canal, Tidal Canal, Soane Canal, Agra Canal, cannot, according to the experience derived from other canals, be reasonably expected to pay their working expenses in consequence of their having been less than ten years in operation. The construction-outlay on these canals to end of 1876-77 will be £5,139,912, and the loss in their working during 1877-78 is anticipated to amount to £20,653 or about ·40 per cent.

"The third group of canals consists of the Eastern and Western Jamna Canals, the construction-outlay on which, as recorded in the accounts, includes only that portion spent by the British Government, and shows that with a total outlay of £746,129 to end of 1876-77, and an anticipated revenue in 1877-78 of £150,774, the Eastern Jamna Canal will pay 26·3 per cent. and the Western Jamna Canal 20·2. The results for these canals are expected to be as follows:—

	Eastern Jumna	Western Jumna.	Total.
Expected construction-outlay by British Government to end of 1876-77	242,433	503,696	746,129
Expected nett direct and indirect revenue in 1877-78 ...	63,822	86,952	150,774
Percentage of net revenue on Capital outlay ..	26·3	17·3	20·2

"Next come the inundation-canals in the Panjáb, the construction-outlay on which to end of 1876-77 is expected to be £124,208, and the nett returns in 1877-78, direct and indirect, will probably amount to £12,961 or 10·4 per cent.

"Finally, there are the minor works of Irrigation constructed entirely by the British Government, such as the Dun and Rohilkhand Canals, the Bijnúr Canals, the Bandelkhand Irrigation Works, the Delhi and Gurgaon Irrigation Works, and the Shahpur and Shahiwal Canals. The nett return from these works is balanced at £9,350, against a Capital outlay of £242,686, so that the works pay about 3·8 per cent.

'Thus the Ganges and Barí Doab Canals are expected to pay 5·2 per cent., the Eastern and Western Jamna Canals 20·2 per cent., the Inundation Canals 10·4 per cent., and certain minor Irrigation Works 3·8 per cent. On the other hand, the Orissa, Midnapur, and Tidal Canals, the Sone Canal and the Agra Canal, having been less than ten years in operation, are to be worked at a loss of ·40 per cent. on construction-outlay.

"The estimate of the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company provides for a nett receipt of £700 in 1877-78.

"The provision for State outlay on Establishment and land for these works is £1,050, and the charge for interest on Guaranteed Capital close upon £50,000, so that the operations of the Company are expected to involve a charge on the State in 1877-78 of £50,350. The conditions under which the Government bore the deficit in the working expenses of these canals have now ceased, the Secretary of State having decided that the Government is not to advance funds for such expenses.

"The construction-outlay, actual and approximate, Ordinary and Extraordinary, on State Railways, to end of 1876-77, is £14,895,668, of which sum £440,380 will have been expended on lines not in operation during the year 1877-78. The construction cost of the lines, the whole or part of which will earn revenue in 1877-78, is thus £14,455,288.

"The net receipts from such railways during the year 1877-78 are expected to be £191,790, and from 1·3 per cent. of the construction-outlay of £14,455,288, which includes £1,703,995 of stores, &c., in suspense.

"I have thus given a general sketch of our operations, adhering, for the purpose rather of easier comparison than because the form has anything special to recommend it, to the shape the review of these details took last year. I will now allude to our present and proposed expenditure on Military Works, for which in 1877-78 a grant of £1,231,985 is assigned, that for last year being £1,228,400.

"Of this grant, 38 per cent. must be spent on repairs, maintenance of buildings, barracks, and furniture, and the very heavy proportion of 22 per cent. on Establishment, a proportion apparently inseparable from all Public Works in India, and which is surprising to those acquainted with the subject at Home. It is quite true this supervision is costly, due to some extent to the employment of of a highly-paid European staff, but still more due to the fact that the practice in India is to charge salaries and wages of overseers, gangers and leading men—in fact, all who are on permanent employment, or paid by the month—to Establishment, whilst in England and the Colonies this would be charged to the work. I believe our practice in India is better, and really exercises a beneficial influence, and tends to keep down unnecessary establishment; but as it is not understood at home, our supervision has been often commented on as extravagant.

"Since 1873-74 there has been a steady increase for repairs, due for the most part to existing buildings not having been kept in proper repair during several years prior to 1872-73. Repairs were deferred because the efforts of the Department were mainly directed to pushing on new buildings for the additional European force thrown into the country immediately after the mutiny. There is no point on which the Inspector-General is now so particular as that of keeping existing buildings in a sound condition, and we have not withheld the necessary funds for this purpose, even though the result has been to decrease the provision for expenditure on new works.

"I have in the last two years practically not permitted any new barracks, with one exception in Madras, to be commenced, but have concentrated the efforts of the officers to complete those that have been already begun; and when I use the word new works, it only applies to works the construction of which had been approved, or the buildings of which had really been begun, before 1875.

"So that, of the provision for works in progress, it is expected that works, the estimates for which aggregate £467,500, will be completed during the year, the grant being £165,868.

"The remaining works in progress, the completion of which in 1877-78 is not anticipated, are estimated to cost £245,000, of which £77,500 will have been expended to end of 1876-77, leaving £165,000 to complete. The grant allowed for next year is £62,180, so that these works may reasonably be expected to be finished off in three years.

"Of the provision for new works, £49,789 have been allotted for completion by the close of 1877-78. The remaining new works are 27 in number, estimated to cost £167,500, and the grant allowed is £69,630.

"Thus, on the whole, works estimated to cost £930,000 will be in hand during the year, the probable expenditure to end of 1876-77 being £405,000. The grant allowed for the coming year is £347,467, so that a further sum of £175,000 will remain to be provided for their completion. These figures exclude the sum of £45,700 allowed for works, the probable cost of which is not known as yet.

"The grant for Original Works, Military, may be thus further analysed—

Buildings for accommodation of troops	215,082
Drainage Works	5,575
Protective „	6,000
Water-supply	74,540
Fortifications	12,850
Works for Ordnance Department	38,100
„ for Commissariat Department	11,590
„ for Dock-yards	11,200
Military lines of communications	24,100
Miscellaneous Works	6,120
Minor Works	94,793

"The amount allowed for buildings has been applied to some extent to the scheme for completing barrack accommodation on a permanent scale. It cannot be told exactly what that scheme will cost, as the wants of the Army vary from time to time. But we have considered every means for reducing the cost; and in this view, amongst other measures, the principle of remodelling old buildings and adapting them to the requirements of the present day has been followed, in some cases with much financial advantage. The buildings so remodelled have been found to answer the purpose.

"Under the Government of Madras the chief work for which provision has been made, is for a new set of buildings for European troops at Punamali estimated to cost £37,037, of which it is computed that £4,001 will have been spent by end of 1876-77: the grant allowed for the work is £10,000. The scheme provides for double-storeyed barracks for 200 men, to cost £16,807, barracks for 30 families to cost £8,015, and a double-storeyed hospital for 90 patients to cost £10,200.

"Another work for which a provision of £5,000 has been made, and to which it is necessary to draw attention, is the scheme for constructing an entire set of new lines for a Regiment of Native Infantry at Pudupetta, near Madras. Rendered necessary in consequence of the existing lines occupied by the Regiment having been condemned by several high authorities as inconvenient and unhealthy, the demand has been considered to be an urgent want, which should be met as soon as possible, and is an excess. The provision made is for purchase of land for the lines. The probable cost of the scheme is not known as yet.

"Of the grant allowed for Bombay, £16,000 is for the project for providing additional barrack accommodation at Ghorepori, estimated to cost £60,680, of which £2,600 will have been spent by end of 1876-77. The scheme provides for 12 single-storeyed barracks and one block of quarters for married men.

"For troops of the Native Army under the Government of Bombay provision of funds has also been made. Thus a sum of £3,000 has been allowed for improvements to lines of the troops at Bori Bunder. The scheme provides for two new rows and for re-erecting 25 rows of sheds, and for providing drainage, the latter to cost £2,943; the total scheme involving an expense of £6,141, of which £3,146 has already been spent.

"At Puna two new buildings for a Regiment of Native Infantry are about to be provided at a cost of £6,035, the grant for the year being £2,600. The buildings consist of a hospital to cost £3,937; a quarter-guard to cost £766; a school-room costing £873; and sundry small buildings, including an armourer's shop, to cost £458.

"For the troops of the Native force located at Jacobábád £2,100 have been given for improving and providing new hospital accommodation.

"Under the orders of Government the troops of the Panjáb Frontier Force are provided with quarters at the expense of the State, and a grant of £7,570 has been provided for the purpose for 1877-78. Among the works to be executed are the re-construction of Native Infantry lines at Kohát to cost £5,300, the grant for 1877-78 being £2,500. A hospital for the Right Native Infantry lines at Dera Ismail Khán is also to be provided at a cost of £1,360. In the Fort at Dhalipghur the quarters for Native officers are to be re-constructed at a cost of £970.

"At Kamthí, in the Central Provinces, the principal of remodelling existing buildings to suit them to present requirements has been carried out with great success. Following out this principle, £7,030 has been provided for remodelling three barracks of European Infantry and one of Artillery. For 24 families of European Infantry at Kamthí accommodation is to be provided at an expense of £6,800, the grant for 1877-78 being £4,000. And at Jabalpore £3,000 has been allotted for re-roofing three of the barracks of European Infantry.

"At Rangoon the scheme of providing new buildings for European Infantry is being gradually carried out. By the end of 1877-78 the first and third sections of the scheme, providing accommodation for three Companies and the Band, will have been carried out at a cost of £25,865, the grant for the year being £7,850. The single-storeyed barracks for 80 men and 4 sergeants, in the redoubt at Thayetmyo, will also have been finished at a cost of £6,855, the grant for 1877-78 being £2,500.

"In Central India the only military works of importance are at Nímuch and Mau, both occupied by troops of the Bombay Army. At Mau a provision of £7,000 has been made for commencing the long desired scheme for providing new accommodation for the Artillery. The estimate of the cost of so doing has still to be prepared. At Nímach auxiliary buildings are still required to complete the new sets of buildings already constructed for the Artillery, and a provision of £8,000 has been made for the purpose.

"At Hyderabad, Deccan, the great project for providing an entire set of new buildings for a Regiment of European Cavalry at Trimulgiri is approaching completion. The proved unhealthiness of the buildings occupied by that Regiment at Secunderabad rendered it necessary to remove their location to the adjoining station of Trimulgiri. The scheme is expected to cost £232,500, of which £165,000 will have been spent by end of 1876-77, leaving £67,500 to complete, the grant for 1877-78 being £20,730. The project provides for the accommodation, in four double-storeyed barracks, of all the single men of a full Regiment of Cavalry, and of 50 married men in four blocks of single-storeyed buildings. A hospital for male patients, to cost £8,500, is also provided. Quarters for Officers have also been constructed, the accommodation being given in single-storeyed buildings constructed on the unit system. The usual auxiliary and subsidiary buildings have also been provided.

"Turning to the works in charge of the Inspector-General of Military Works, the grant allowed for buildings for accommodation for troops, for the force located in Bengal, North-Western Provinces and the Panjab, is only £59,250. Of this grant, £24,750 has been allowed for buildings in the hills, and £34,500 for buildings in the plains.

"For buildings in the hills £1,100 has been allowed for the completion of quarters for families at Jullapahar, estimated to cost £2,699, and of which £1,259 have already been spent. For providing verandahs to the barracks for single and married men at Cliffden, Marrí, £2,000 has been given, £1,000 having been already spent. For the buildings at Ránikhet £3,150 have been allotted. Of this sum, £3,100 has been devoted to a Regimental Hospital which is estimated to cost £10,789, and of which £7,689 wil have been spent by end of 1876-77. For the building at Chakráta £10,500 has been assigned. Of this sum, £3,000 is for barracks for single men, estimated to cost £5,802, and £300 for barracks for married men, to cost £2,949. Of this £2,649 has already been spent. For quarters for Staff Sergeants £2,200 has been given.

"Of the grant of £34,500 for buildings in the plains, a sum of £10,000 has been devoted to the re-construction of barracks and out-offices at Lucknow, and £10,000 for a similar purpose at Faizábád. The schemes are estimated to cost, the former £65,760, and the latter £27,692, and provide for the renewal of the old barracks constructed immediately after the mutiny. By this means the expense of constructing new barracks is avoided.

"At Nowgong a barrack for the Royal Artillery will be completed at a cost of £5,378, the sum allotted for the purpose for next year being £4,700. Family barracks for Infantry will also be completed for £7,000 at Agra, the grant allowed being £1,500, and the hospital for the left Wing Native Infantry at the same place will be finished at a total cost of £3,838.

"The out-offices for barracks for single men of the Infantry at Mooltan will be completed next year with a grant of £2,000, £4,000 having already been spent.

For drainage works only £5,575, I am sorry to say, has been assigned, for it is a service in which I wish I could spend more, as I firmly believe that good drainage and well selected sites, with good drinking water, will ever ensure the health of troops. Of this sum, £1,000 has been allotted for the drainage of the Fort at Govindghur, and £1,000 for the drainage of the Cantonment at Lucknow, both being very urgent sanitary works. For the drainage of swamps lying to windward of European Infantry barracks at Kamptí £1,000 has been allotted, the expenditure incurred to end of 1876-77 having been £504. For the drainage of the lines of the European troops at Mecan Meer £300 has been given.

"The encroachments of the Indus at Dera Ismail Khán were so serious that it was necessary to consider whether the Cantonment should not be removed. But by the skill of the Engineers concerned, protective works have been constructed during the past and present year.

"The serious overflow of the Kanhan River at Kamthí last rains, which led to much property, both public and private, being placed in imminent risk of destruction, has forced us to consider what works should be devised for protection from an inundation which may occur at any time. The result has been a scheme estimated to cost about £6,000, and for which the necessary funds have been allowed. It is expected that the work will be done before the next rains.

"I cannot over-estimate the importance to the health of the troops of providing a pure system of supply of water, and it has led me to increase the grant for the purpose from £45,900 in 1876-77 to £774,540 in 1877-78. The works provided for are as follows:—

"The Ulsoor water-supply project at Bangalore will be completed by the end of 1877-78 at a cost of £14,162, the grant for 1877-78 being £500, in addition to £1,250 for providing a new filter, and making certain alteration to the work. The project is in addition to the scheme for supplying Bangalore with water, which is being carried out at an expense of £55,000 from Mysore funds.

"A small sum of £1,000 has been provided for settling tanks in connection with the water-supply at Puná.

"In the Panjáb £1,410 have been given for Artesian borings and wells at two of the frontier out-posts.

"A sum of £770 has been allowed for sinking wells at Asírgarh.

"For water-supply at Trimulgiri and Sikandarábád a provision of £4,610 has been made. Of this sum £4,000 has been reserved for pipes from England for the project for the North water-supply scheme at Trimulgiri, estimated to cost £25,000. The balance of the grant for 1877-78 has been devoted to an engine and pump for water-supply to the 2nd European Infantry Regiment.

"At Nasírábád, in Rájputána, it is hoped that the scheme for supplying the station with water at a cost of £25,874 will have been completed by end of 1877-78. The expenditure on the work to end of 1876-77 has been £13,807, the grant for next year being £10,900.

"The scheme of water-supply at Mhow, for which a grant of £3,000 has been given, has still to be matured. This is now being done.

"For the scheme of the water-supply at Ambála £10,000 has been given. The complete project has yet to be matured. Meanwhile a project for a temporary supply of water is under execution at a cost of £6,800, of which £5,000 will be made use of in the permanent project.

"Small sums of £500 and £900, respectively, have been allotted for water-supply tanks at Darjeeling, and for a filter and storage reservoir at Chukrata.

"For water-supply at Mían Mír £13,700 has been allotted. It is expected to cost £16,000, of which £2,100 has already been spent. The scheme provides for a supply of 6 gallons per head per diem to British Troops.

"The grant allowed for the water-supply at Pesháwar is £25,000. A sum of £25,400 will have been spent by end of 1876-77 on an estimate of £28,752. But the complete project for the work has still to be prepared.

"For clearing and repairing the tank at Fort Kángra £1,000 has been given.

"The limited amount of the Public Works grant prevents much being done under the head of Fortification. A provision of £6,000 has been made for improving the defences at Aden, and of £2,000 for keeping in repair the large stock of plant collected for the harbour defences at Bombay. For the inner line of defences at Ferozepoor £2,000 has been given. The estimated cost of this work is £4,250, of which £2,220 will have been spent by end of 1876-77, so that the work will be completed next year. The bomb-proof magazine in the redoubt at Thayetmyo will be finished for £2,762, the grant being £1,650. And sufficient funds have been provided for keeping the existing forts in an efficient state of repair.

"The additional buildings for the Small-Arms factory at Kirkí will be completed by the end of 1877-78, the grant for that year being £4,000, and the computed outlay to end of 1876-77 £10,000. For buildings for 6 incorporating mills in the Gunpowder Factory at Kirkí a provision of £5,000 has been made, the estimated cost being £15,190.

"Amongst the measures contemplated for a fortified post and place of refuge at Rawul Pindee, the provision of buildings for magazines and other works of the Ordnance Department found a place. The sum it is expected to spend on the purpose is £83,750, and in furtherance of the scheme a provision of £19,900 has been made in the Budget next year for Store-room, Workshops, Armoury, Offices, Laboratory, and Small Arms Ammunition Magazine These works are expected to cost £38,041, of which it is expected that £15,800 will have been spent by end of 1876-77.

"The alteration to the Gun-Carriage Factory at Fatehgúrh, the construction of the Powder Mágazine in the Fort of Allahabad, and the provision of Workshops in the Arsenal at Ferozepoor are all expected to be finished during the coming year, at a cost of £4,488, £9,183 and £7,464, respectively, the grant allowed for next year being £1,900, £1,000, and £1,200. A grant of £2,200 has also been allowed for the Pebble Powder House at Ishapore.

"Some small works for the Commissariat Department will be completed this year at Allahabad.

"A small amount has been reserved for urgent works in hand at the Dock-yards, but for Bombay, in view of future contingencies, I wish I could say the sum was larger.

"For Military roads the grant to Chukrata is £19,900. Of this sum £10,000 is to be devoted to the completion of the bridge over the River Jumna, which is expected to cost £30,545, and of which £20,500 will have been spent by end of 1876-77. The balance of the grant has been devoted to completing the earthwork and formation of the road.

"The road to Dalhousie will also, it is hoped, be finished during the year at a cost of £68,000, the grant for the purpose for next year being £4,500, the outlay to end of 1876-77 being expected to be £63,500.

"A provision of £19,500 has been made for improving the roof and making sundry additions to the Lawrence Asylum buildings at Mount Abu.

"Next to nothing has been appropriated for the defences of our ports or arsenals, and literally nothing for strong places; if no change in our policy is made, there is no prospect of anything material being done to remedy these wants which, to repeat former warnings, are becoming more imperative and more essential the more you raise and develope the material wealth and value of this country.

"Let me not here be understood to advocate the costly and ponderous defences which it has been the fashion of recent years to elaborate under the idea of converting defences into success over attack, but rather more simple measures which may protect us from insult on the sea-board, and be sufficient to leave in the interior the sick and the helpless in comparative safety. But I regard this subject as one of much more serious importance than is practically recognised by the part assigned to it in the distribution of the resources of the State.

"The bulk of the outlay on Civil Buildings and Roads is now drawn from grants made over to Provincial Services. The direct expenditure from Imperial Funds is for Departmental and Government buildings, church, burial grounds, harbour works, civil works, roads, as well as for the establishments at Cooper's Hill and Roorkee, the colliery charges at Warora, and the furlough allowances in England.

"The grant for 1877-78 is taken at £431,365, or £67,500 in excess of that for the previous year, owing to the provision required for the works at Simla.

"This sum does not fully represent our wants, and I regret there is but little hope of any great or sensible increase to the sum now set apart.

"Under Civil Buildings the grant amounts to £139,069, of which one-third is for repairs. The balance is allowed for Original Works, and distributed among the different departments in the following manner:—

"For the Salt Works, the sum allotted (£5,494) has been fairly divided between Madras and Bombay.

"On Opium, the whole grant (£14,752), with the exception of a small sum reserved for Oudh, has been fairly apportioned between Bengal and the North-Western Provinces.

"The greater part of the sum (£2,700) allowed for the Mints is needed at Calcutta, and it is most probable that the grant under this head will have to be largely increased for next year.

"Of the sum set aside for Postal (£13,099), one-half nearly is for the introduction of several small post offices, and the remainder for additions to existing offices throughout India.

"Under Telegraph (£12,531) allotments have been made for new offices, &c., at Ootacamund, Alipore, Ambála, Gadac, Rajanpore, and Gauháti, and the amount given to Bombay completes the instalments required for the signallers' quarters. Suitable telegraph and post office accommodation has still to be provided for the Presidency Town of Madras.

"The largest sum (£21,390) is required for the Government of India Buildings, and includes the cost of additions to the Peterhoff estate, the purchase of houses at Simla, and improvements to the viceregal buildings generally.

"The designs for the Mayo College Buildings at Ajmer by Major Mant, R. E., have been approved and the grant (£6,560) is provided for the collection of necessary material. The funds (£4,194) required for the boarding houses in connection with this College are being found by Native States.

"Out of a total of £6,784, sums have been reserved for the completion of the Thuggee Jail at Indore, and for the commencement of a new Jail at Mercara. The Civil Jail at Rewah will probably be constructed from funds supplied by the State of Rewah.

"From the amount (£4,066) under Churches, &c., the completions of the Bolarum church and the commencement of a Roman Catholic Chapel at Rawul Pindee have been provided for.

"The restoration of the beautiful temple at Ajmer, referred to in the review of 1876-77, has to be continued at an excess on the original estimate, the peculiar nature of the work and the necessity for its extension during the course of reconstruction having led to this result.

"The great scheme of restoration and preservation of antiquities in the North-Western Provinces is undertaken from Provincial Funds, aided by a grant from Imperial Revenues.

"Under Communications the grants allowed are for provinces to which the Provincial Service arrangements do not apply, namely, Rájputána, Central India and Coorg. The total £64,035, as against £69,270 for last year, is divided into £20,934 for Original Works, and £43,102 for Repairs.

"The outlay from Imperial funds in the construction of new roads in Rájputána has practically ceased.

"The conditions under which these roads were commenced, namely, that 4ths of the outlay on the portions passing through foreign territory would be provided for by Native States, have in some cases been fulfilled, while in others the roads have been made over to the States concerned to complete. The provision £10,552 is for the repair of the roads so constructed, and of this sum nearly ¼th is for the portion lying in foreign territory.

"In Central India also a portion of the outlay on roads has been and is still being met partly from funds supplied by Native States; for, in addition to the expenditure (£14,050) on the roads from Mau to Nimuch, Nowgong to Satna, and Dewas to Ashta, the road from Gwalior to Chumbal River receives an allotment of £4,800 from a contribution by His Highness the Mahárájá Scindiah. Of the total for repairs £29,000, more than half is for the Agra and Bombay Road, one-fifth is absorbed between Nimuch and Khandwa, and the balance is distributed over the Gwalior and Jhánsí Roads.

"The comparatively large grant of £5,614 to Coorg is to facilitate trade and encourage the export of coffee by opening out new communications; the maintenance of existing roads also is contemplated to an extent of £3,300 from Imperial funds.

"Under Miscellaneous Public Improvements, £35,320 have been set aside, in which £5,935 are included for repairs. Three-fourths of the grant is absorbed by the Simla water-supply project, for which, exclusive of establishment, £27,435 has been provided until the arrangements with the Municipality for the provision of funds have been settled.

"Under Light-houses £1,500 have been assigned to Karáchi for a new light-house with its revolving light.

"For the harbour works at Karáchi, the sum appropriated for maintenance, conservancy, dredging, &c., exclusive of establishment, is but £5,000. The growing importance of this harbour, with the early completion of the Indus Valley Line, make it desirable to leave as little as possible undone which may facilitate and increase the rapidity of our communications between the Panjáb and the sea. The construction of jetties has also to be considered with the necessary sheds for the accommodation of trade. These works should receive early consideration, and the grant now fixed at £5,000 will probably have to be doubled before the close of the year.

"The importance of the Warora colliery works to the coal industry of India, and their effect on the reduction of Railway working expenses, is obvious. The pits are now in working order, and it is expected during the year 36,000 tons of coal will be raised, and be sold for a sum closely approaching the expenses of production.

"The exploration for coal in the Central Provinces continues, and the necessary grants have been assigned for the Satpura and Warora Districts.

"The Budget Estimate of the Telegraph Department for 1877-78, as contrasted with the Regular Estimate for 1876-77 and the actual average receipts of the three previous years, shows that—

The Receipts were in 1876-77...	332,100
The Budget-Estimate of 1877-78 is taken at	315,500
The average of actuals for the last three years being	281,200
The Charges were in 1876-77	491,800
The total nett charge thus being	159,700
The Budget-Estimate for 1877-78 is taken at	495,500
Making a total nett charge of	180,000
The average of actuals for the last three years being	444,800
Making a total nett charge of	163,600
Thus, on the whole, the expected nett charge in 1877-78, as compared with the Regular Estimate for 1876-77, shows a nett increase of	20,300
Of this nett increase the amount due to an anticipated falling off in the revenue of the Indo-European Telegraph Department, caused by the construction of a second line of cable from Bombay to Suez, is	13,900
While the payment to the Indo-European Company in England in excess of receipts, due to its being anticipated that the messages despatched from Home, vid Russia, will be more than those despatched from India by the same route, is	14,215
so that in these two items alone there is a nett increase of	28,115

"Under Receipts the figures for the Budget and Regular Estimate for the Indian and Indo-European Telegraph Departments, as compared with the "Compared with the Budget-Estimate of the current year, the Regular Estimate for the Indian Telegraph Department shows a gratifying increase of £20,800.

"The steady increase in the receipts of the Telegraph Department, as shown by the preceding figures, justifies the expectation that the receipts for next year may be set down somewhat in excess of those for the current year, and the estimate for 1877-78 has therefore been accepted at £241,000, being £5,000 only more than the Regular Estimate for 1876-77.

"In the case of the Indo-European Telegraph Department, the Regular Estimate amounts to £21,300 in excess of the Budget-Estimate for 1876-77, of which £6,400 occurs in England and the balance in India. The increase in England is ascribed to be due to recoveries of revenue earned in the previous year arising from the interruption of the Red Sea route from 15th November 1875 to 3rd February 1876, and to the receipt of £1,986, being an additional instalment of the Persian debt. The increase in India is due to a general increase of receipts on the Government lines due partly to general causes, and partly to the late interruption of the Madras-Penang cable.

For 1877-78 the Budget-Estimate of receipts in India of the Indo-European Telegraph Department amounts to only	68,400
The probable receipts of 1876-77 being...	81,200
And the actual receipts of 1875-76	76,468

The opening of the duplicate cable now being laid between Suez and Bombay is expected to affect the income of the Indo-European Telegraph Department to the extent of £13,900, and the estimate for next year has therefore had to be reduced accordingly—

In England the expected receipts of 1877-78 are set down at	6,100
But in the Budget-Estimate of Expenditure a sum of	14,215

Is included for amount due to the Indo-European Telegraph Company for earnings collected in India on messages home being expected to exceed the sum due by the Company for earnings collected in England on messages out, so that really the estimate of revenue is for a net charge of ... 8,115
The expected receipts of 1876-77 being 14,900
And the actual receipts of 1875-76 17,122

The Budget charges have been accepted for a sum of £411,900 (including £13,050 for Ceylon). Of this amount £123,900 are for capital outlay, £17,350 being for establishment and other charges, £21,560 for additional stores, and £84,990 for actual construction operations on the following lines of telegraph :—

" Excluding the sum provided for the completion of the special line to Quetta and Kelát, the whole of the provision made for departmental line will practically be absorbed by the cost of an additional wire between Chittagong and Elephant Point, and the line Madura to Ramnad, with an extra wire from Madura to Trichinopoly. The former will materially improve communication with Burma, and is rendered necessary by the increased importance of this route in connection with the cable shortly to be laid between Rangoon and Penang, so that it will be necessary to make the line from Calcutta to Rangoon fit for international traffic. On this point the following extract from a letter No. 58, dated 8th June 1876, will show the necessity for the work, the estimate for which has been sanctioned by the Government of India:—

'The existing line between Calcutta and Rangoon, although gradually improving with every season's work, is still utterly unfit for international traffic, and incomparably inferior to the line across the Dhunds between Deesa and Hyderabad, respecting which the Indo-European Company have made so many complaints. It consists, moreover, of one wire unequal to the existing traffic, and although a second wire has been sanctioned and is in course of erection, as far as Chittagong, it will be fully taken up by its own local traffic. It will therefore be necessary to add an extra wire throughout, for although we may expect no cable messages so long as the Madras-Penang line is in order, when an accident does occur, and they are diverted viâ Rangoon, no delays would be tolerated by the Company or by the public.'

"It may be added that this expenditure has been made the basis of a demand for an increase in the Indian Tariff for all Foreign messages, an increase which cannot be refused and which will add more than £10,000 to the annual revenue of the Telegraph Department.

"The latter, that is the line from Madura to Trichinopoly, is needed to strengthen communication between Madras and Ceylon and the South-west coast, by the substitution of an inland line, mainly on a Railway, for the existing precarious sea-coast line between Negapatam and Tuticorin.

"The Budget-Estimate for 1876-77 was passed for—

Expenditure	383,000
Receipts	215,200
Nett charge	167,800

"For 1877-78 the figures are—

Expenditure	411,900
Nett charge	170,000

an increased charge, therefore, of £2,100, as compared with the Budget for 1876-77. This increase is entirely due to increased capital outlay, and excluding capital outlay from the figures for both years, 1877-78 shows an improvement of £19,749 over 1876-77.

"There has been for several years a progressive reduction in the difference between earnings and revenue charges. This reduction is very marked during 1876-77, and justifies the expectation that but a very short time is needed for the Department to pay, not only its working expenses, but also a small dividend on the capital expended.

"Nett annual loss on revenue account, i. e., the difference between expenditure excluding capital outlay and receipts including pro formâ charges:—

1872-73	73,211
1873-74	56,166
1874-75	44,837
1875-76	42,367
1876-77	under 10,000	(partly estimated).

"The capital expended from the commencement is nominally somewhat over £3,000,000. I say nominally, because this amount includes the value of lines and offices abandoned or destroyed in past years.

"In the earlier days of Indian telegraphy, lines were hastily constructed of perishable material, requiring frequent renewal, and were abandoned or replaced by others mainly on military and political considerations; but for the sums spent year by year the State received a full equivalent in the assistance, direct and indirect, which the Telegraph afforded in the administration of the country.

"Again, contrary to the experience of Europe, in India the Telegraph preceded the Railway, and long before the Railway was more than an idea, the Telegraph had spread over many hundreds of miles. As the Railways extended, it became necessary to re-erect the Telegraph lines within the Railway fences, to secure the advantages of immunity from malicious interference, and the foregoing observations indicate the direction which such revision must take should it become imperative.

"The result of the changes introduced in the tariff for international messages by the Convention of St. Petersburg has not, so far as the Indian Department is concerned, been altogether successful; for while the number of messages exchanged with foreign countries has materially increased, the increase in their value is only nominal, and there are not wanting indications of even a prospective decrease. To some extent this may be traced to the insufficiency of the Indian share of the total tariff, but it is questionable whether the reduction of the unit charge to one word can prove a financial success, unless the rate per word be proportionately very much higher than the previous rates for the larger units.

"There are two points of detail in connection with the rules for foreign messages which have given rise to complaints from the Chambers of Commerce in this country—one referring to gratuitous repetitions of messages which are supposed to have been incorrectly transmitted; the other to the charge made for figure cipher telegrams. Proposals have been made to other States, parties to the Convention, by this Government and by the Postal Telegraph Department of England, to modify the rules on these points somewhat in accordance with the wishes of the mercantile community, but these proposals have been rejected, and the grounds of their non-acceptance cannot well be contested.

"The real grievance of the Indian public lies in the circumstance that the rules are not strictly enforced in England; but it has been explained that the relaxations have there been carried out by private Telegraph Companies in a spirit of competition and with a view to attract customers (though, possibly, for the present at a loss to the shareholders); that such a proceeding is one which the manager of a private company, dealing with private money subscribed for a special purpose, may perhaps adopt with some sort of justification, though in defiance of rule, but that his example cannot be followed by a public agent dealing with public funds for the benefit of a class interest at a further sacrifice to the general community, who have already to bear the loss on an unremunerative undertaking. An opportunity will shortly be afforded of reconsidering the rules in concert with other Administrations, and I venture to hope that some means may be found of amending those which have given rise to so much discussion.

"The fact not generally known that the telegraphs are worked at a loss in some of the principal countries in Europe, and an examination of the results obtained in Great Britain, enable some conception to be formed of the difficulties with which State, i.e., cheap, telegraphy has to contend under the most favourable conditions; and it is a fair matter for congratulation that India, with all her disadvantages, possesses a highly efficient and extensive telegraph system which at no very distant date promises to be self-supporting.

"I have dwelt at some length on this subject, for I have felt that it is due to the Chambers of Commerce of the three great centres of Indian trade, with whom we have been in communication, to offer to them here a fuller explanation of our motives and position than I could introduce into ordinary official or business correspondence.

"I would add a few words of explanation on the Indo-European Telegraph Department which has charge of the Indian Government lines from Kurrachee to Fao and Teheran. The head-quarters of the Director-in-Chief are in London, where there is an office of account adjustment, with a small branch office at Constantinople.

"The lines of the Department are in two sections: the Persian, which includes the lines in Persia, and the Persian Gulf section, which includes the cables connecting Kurrachee with Bushire and Fao, and the land line along the coast of Beloochistan from Kurrachee to Jask.

"The Gulf section has its head-quarters at Kurrachee, where are the offices of the Deputy Director (who is in charge of the section) and of the Traffic Manager, as well as workshops and a store depôt. A special steamer, the Amberwitch, is attached to the service of this section for the repair of cables and conveyance of establishment and stores.

"The land-line consists of 739 miles of line and 1,478 miles of wire. It has, besides the usual maintenance establishments, the aid of a special Political Agency at Gwadur, half the cost of which is borne by the Telegraph Department. Subsidies to the extent of £3,128 a year are also paid to Chiefs in Beloochistan for protection of this line.

"The cables of the Gulf section are 1,738 miles in length, of which 1,235 miles are of gutta-percha, and 503 miles of India-rubber core.

"The Persian section is under a Director, whose head-quarters are at Teheran. This section contains 792 miles of line and 2,406 of wire. The lines of the Department do not extend beyond Teheran.

"The total length of the lines of the Department is 2,754 miles, consisting of 3,884 miles of wire and 1,738 miles of cable.

Excluding the provision for payment to foreign lines of traffic earnings realized in India, the Budget-Estimate for 1877-78 amounts to	95,985
The Regular Estimate of 1876-77 being	102,200
So that there is a decrease of	6,215

which is due to the work of erection of iron poles to replace existing wooden ones, and for which a provision of £3,980 was made in current year's Budget, not being required next year. There is also a decrease of £850 in the provision for Repairs.

"The estimate has been framed for the authorized scale of expenditure for Establishment and Repairs, and there is nothing in it to call for comment, or which can be reduced.

Extraordinary Irrigation.

"The total grant for the year 1877-78, from extraordinary funds for Irrigation, amounts to £900,000, distributed to the several Provinces as follows. This amount is exclusive of £107,500 to be spent from contribution of the Native States for the Sirhind Canal.

Madras	50,000
Bombay	40,000
Bengal	275,000
North-Western Provinces	260,000
Panjáb	275,000

"The works for which this sum is provided were all in progress during the current year (1876-77), in which the aggregate outlay under Extraordinary is expected to amount to £1,012,000.

"In Madras the improvements to the Godavery and Kristna systems of canals are still the most important works in progress.

"In the Godavery system several works for the improvement of irrigation and navigation in the Eastern and Western Deltas were carried out. The widening of the main canal in the Eastern Delta has been finished; the banks of the Cóconada, Ingeram, and Coringa main canals were raised and improved. The widening of the bank and Coringa Canals was carried on; nine miles of the former were opened out for navigation; one lock was built and four more were completed; and three weirs finished. Ten minor distributaries with an aggregate length of 25 miles were completed, and some improvements made to drainage cuts.

"In the Western Delta, widening and other improvements were carried on on nine canals; the widening of the main canal above water-line was completed, as also the widening and deepening of the Bank canal for 22½ miles and some masonry-works built; on these works about £20,000 were spent during 1876-77. The sum allotted for the coming year is £28,561.

"In the Kristna Delta the works on Ryves's main canal were much retarded by continued outbreaks of cholera; but they will probably be completed early in the coming year. The new supply-head, though incomplete, was opened for the admission of water, the volume supplied by the old heads being insufficient owing to the low state of the river caused by the excessive drought.

"The alterations to these channels will probably be completed as relief works. The widening of the Masulipatam Canal will also be completed early "The Streeviguntum Anicut Project, which will supply irrigation to a portion of the Tinnevelly District, and water to the town of Tuticorin, was practically finished during the year; only a portion of the revetment of the Korsur Pallam Tank, and the raising to full height of the Ooppar Oday dam being incomplete. The grant for the coming year is £3,477.

"On the Pennair Delta some expenditure was incurred from the Ordinary grant. A sum of £3,183 is allotted from the Extraordinary grant for this work during the coming year.

"The Sungum Project for the irrigation of the Northern Delta of the Pennair River from storage reservoirs in the river is still under consideration; no work is contemplated on it in the coming year.

"The Perryaur Project referred to in last year's Resolution is still under consideration; the works which will consist of a tunnel through the Ghauts in the Madura District leading from a large storage reservoir are estimated to cost £602,762; there is no prospect of their being commenced this year.

"In Bombay the only work of any magnitude in progress is the Moota Moola Project consisting of a dam across the River Moota, 99 feet in height and 3,683 feet long, exclusive of the waste weir which is 1,153 feet long, with channels for the water-supply of Poona and Kirkee and for the irrigation of about 70,000 acres. The total expenditure to the end of the current year amounted to £423,372. A grant of £31,921 is proposed for the coming year, which will bring the works, so far as sanctioned, very near completion, the estimated cost of the works being £466,118. The right bank canal, which is capable of discharging 111 cubic feet per second, has been extended to a distance of 39 miles from the head, out of a sanctioned length of 71 miles, and this portion is now being carried out as a famine relief work; the left bank canal, discharging 38 cubic feet per second, has been almost completed. A gross revenue of £7,385 is anticipated from these works during the coming year, and the working expenses are estimated at £1,063.

"The remainder of the grant will be divided among five projects of less importance. £2,671 are set apart for the completion of the Ekruk Tank in Sholapur, at a total cost of £97,116; the water is retained in this reservoir by an earthen dam with a maximum height of 78 feet. £3,113 are allotted to a small canal called the Hathmatti in Ahmadábad; the work, which is approaching completion, is estimated to cost £38,170. £1,177 are allotted to the Lakh Canal in Ahmadnagar, which is also very near completion, at an estimated cost of £25,951. £4,800 are allotted to the Mukti Reservoir and £300 to the Palkhed Canal, both of which are nearly complete, at an estimated cost of £26,456 and £11,029, respectively.

"In Bengal the grants for 1877-78, for the works in Orissa and Midnapoor, are £63,425 and £20,503, respectively. These with the Tidal Canal in Hidgellee are separate sections of the Orissa scheme purchased by Government from the East India Irrigation and Canal Company. They were originally intended to form portions of a connected system, but are now worked as separate projects. About £850,000 have been spent on the Tidal and Midnapoor Series of works, out of an estimated total of £915,803; 248 miles of distributaries are completed and in operation out of a total projected of 320 miles; and during the past kharif season 32,160 acres were irrigated from them. The navigation works on the Midnapoor Series are not quite finished, but by the end of the current year the canal will be complete as a navigation line throughout, with the exception of 4 miles in the second range in which the locks are still under construction.

"The Tidal Canal is in full operation.

"The portion of the Orissa section, to which it has been determined to limit expenditure for the present, consists only of the channels in progress and distributaries for the irrigation of 206,172 acres; the total estimated cost is £1,929,568, of which about £1,740,000 have been expended to the end of the current year (1876-77), the grant for next year being £63,425. The principal lines of canals are nearly finished; before the end of the coming year, with the exception of part of the Kendrapára extension, the whole of the navigable canals will be open for traffic throughout their length. Of the distributaries 501¼ miles are completed and in operation out of a total projected length of 547¼ miles.

"For the Soane Project the grant for next year is £191,071. The cost of this scheme, as now limited, is estimated at £2,710,361, of which about £1,770,000 will have been spent up to the close of the current year (1876-77), by which time the Main Western Canal, the Behía and Dumraon Branch Canals, and the Eastern Main Canal will, with their distributaries, be complete. The Arrah Branch, the Buxar Branch Canal, the Chowsa Branch Canal, and the Patna Canal will, with their distributaries, be ready for irrigation, and, with the exception of some locks and waste weir bridges, will be complete throughout. The area irrigable from the completed portions by the end of the year was 443,000 acres. The Arrah Branch has for some months been navigable throughout with exception of the junction with the Ganges at the termination. A cadastral survey of the land commanded by these channels is under execution, and up to the end of the current year about 1,600 square miles, out of a total of 2,900 square miles, will have been surveyed.

"In the North-Western Provinces there are three series of works in execution from the Loan funds.

"The rectification and completion of the Ganges Canal at an estimated cost of £858,843 is the first: up to the end of the current year about £387,400, exclusive of value of materials in hand, will have been expended. The grant for the coming year is £80,000. The works executed during the past year consisted mainly of protective works to the floorings of the falls in the main canal; the re-construction of two locks, and the building of new locks and weirs near Jaoli regulator, Wallipura and Nanun, with the view of reducing the slope of bed and consequent velocity of the water in the main canal. The completion of the upper portion of the Anupshahr Branch with an escape into the Ganges, and the preparation of surveys and detailed plans and estimates for some of the new branches and some other minor works. The construction of the new branches will be undertaken shortly.

"The Agra Canal is virtually complete, and has been already in operation for two years. The navigation arrangements are nearly complete throughout. A sum of £10,000 has been allotted for the current year for expenditure on drainage works and minor distributaries. The total estimated cost, exclusive of plantation, is £772,553, of which £10,000 are still unspent. The revenue from this canal has so far more than justified the expectations formed regarding it.

"The Lower Ganges Canal is the most important work in progress in the North-West Provinces. The supply is drawn from the River Ganges by a masonry weir, the closing of which was successfully accomplished during the past year. The grant for expenditure during the coming year is £170,000; revised estimates for this project have been submitted, and are now under the consideration of the Government of India, meantime permission has been accorded to proceed with the more urgent works: the first 40 miles of the main canal and the supply branch, 22 miles in length, will be finished by the close of next year. The remaining earth-work of the main canal, as far as its junction with the old Kahnpur Branch, is also nearly complete. About £1,083,000 will have been spent on this canal to the end of 1876-77; the ultimate expenditure will probably considerably exceed £2,000,000.

"The project for a canal from the River Betwa, in Bundlekhund, has proved to be too expensive to justify its execution from the Loan funds: further enquiries are being made with a view to substituting, if practicable, a cheaper and less elaborate scheme.

"The execution of the project for the Eastern Ganges Canal to water a portion of Rohilkhund has been postponed indefinitely owing to doubts as to the volume of water available from the Ganges after providing for the Lower Ganges Canal.

"In the Panjáb there are four series of works in progress from Extraordinary funds; two, the Sirhind and Swat River Canal projects, are not yet brought into operation. Indeed, the last has only been just begun, and though it gives fair prospect of paying interest on its outlay, it has been accepted rather on political than on material reasons. With this exception it is the only new Irrigation project which has been sanctioned within the last two years, for in my opinion it is desirable to complete those already commenced, and watch their prospects before we commit ourselves to any further great or doubtful operations; the other two consist of improvements and extensions of existing canals—the Bári Doáb and the Western Jamna.

"The Bári Doáb Canal has been yielding revenue since 1860; the estimated cost of the improvements now in progress is £333,114, of which about £135,000 will have been spent to the end of 1876-77. The grant proposed for the coming year is £24,791. The two new branches have been completed, the grant now to be made will be utilised in constructing distributaries. Two new distributaries have been completed on the old portion of the canal. The escape sluices of the weir across the Ravi, at the head of the canal, suffered severely from the floods again this year, but not to the same extent as in 1875: the protective and training works were also slightly damaged.

"The work on the Western Jumna Canal consists of a masonry-weir across the Jumna River with regulating heads for both Eastern and Western Jumna Canals; and of new channels in substitution for portions of the main canal and branches. The estimate for works is about £730,000; about £262,000 will have been spent up to the end of 1876-77, and the grant for the coming year is £74,900. The head-works are approaching completion, land has been acquired for the portions known as the new Main Line and new Delhi Branch, and a considerable quantity of material has been collected, two of the new distributaries have been completed, and another is in hand.

"The largest work under construction is the Sirhind Canal, drawing its supply from the Sutlej River for the irrigation of the British Districts of Loodiana and Firozpur, and the Native States of Patiala, Jhínd and Nabha; the entire cost of the works is estimated at £3,087,388, of which £1,187,000 will be contributed by the Native States. The outlay to the end of 1876-77 will probably aggregate £1,185,000, and the grant for the coming year is £248,217, of which £107,317 will be contributed by the Native States. The head-works and the excavation of the main canal are well in hand, and seven out of the eight bridges are complete. Convict labor has been tried with success on these works. The Abohur Branch and the first and second feeders are well advanced. The third feeder and the Patiala navigation channel are nearly complete, and the excavation of the Choya Branch is complete to the 20th mile. Work on the navigable junction with the Sutlej at Firozpoor was commenced during the year.

"The fourth and last work is the Swat River canal in the Eusufzaie valley, at an estimated cost of £167,313; a commencement of work has been made, and about £10,000 spent. Its chief object is to induce some of the lawless borderers to settle down in British territory, and betake themselves to peaceful pursuits. It will be desirable to push on the works to completion as rapidly as possible; the grant proposed for the coming year is £30,184.

"Of the Ordinary grant for 1877-78 amounting to £900,600, as against £958,800 for 1876-77, £141,163 will be an addition to the Capital outlay on the works. £514,133 provides for the current expenses of works in operation for which Capital and Revenue accounts are kept, and £245,305 are charges debitable to works for which there are no Capital or Revenue accounts.

"In Madras the principal works for which Capital expenditure is being partially incurred from the Ordinary Revenues are the Godávari Delta, the Kistna Delta system, the Pennair Delta system, and the Chembrambákam Tank. For the Madras water-works a grant of £2,774, exclusive of establishment, is provided in the budget, which will be utilised on embanking the river and left side of supply-channel, in extension of weirs in the supply-channels and in works of protection from the river floods. The tanks are in good order, and the weir has been raised to full tank level. In the Godavery District a larger extent of the cultivation and of revenue is anticipated. In the Tanjore District the high floods towards the end of July breached in the left bank of the Vennaur Tank, and caused considerable damage to the crops. Owing to the prevailing drought the supply in the river has proved insufficient for the irrigation under the river.

"The total grant amounts to £262,000, the grant for 1876-77 being £272,200, and the average outlay of the three previous years £266,986. The necessity for increasing the normal irrigation grant so often urged by Madras, owing to the vast revenue at stake and the interests to life and agriculture involved by the efficient maintenance of Irrigation Works, has received consideration, and further detailed information has been called for. The large irrigation works already constructed in Godavery, Kistna, Pennair, Tanjore, &c., have assisted not only in reducing the extent of the districts subject to scarcity at exceptional times, but also in increasing production in ordinary years, and in this double capacity they differ from some of the works in Bengal which are more for the prevention of famine only.

"Of the grant assigned, £35,999 is for works, and £146,759 for repairs, the balance being devoted to establishment and other charges. Of the grant for works, £3,987 is for embankments, £3,091 for the Chembrumbaukum Tank Project, and the remainder for sundry minor works.

"In the Bombay Presidency there are numerous irrigation works under construction from the ordinary revenues. The Desert Canal of Sind, which takes it supply from the River Indus, to irrigate land both in Khelat and British territory, is one of the principal. The estimated cost is £83,481, of which £42,500 have been spent; a grant of £6,100 has been made for expenditure during next year on this canal, from which an ultimate net revenue of £7,737 is expected. A grant of £5,362 has been made for the execution of the important series of embankments known as the Kashmor and Begari bunds, which are designed to shut out the flood-water of the Indus for a distance of 45 miles, and to protect the land on the right bank. The provision now made will, it is expected, suffice to complete the work at a total cost of £72,947. The Begári Canal, 76 miles in length, and yielding a revenue of £17,639, is being enlarged, extended, and improved at an estimated cost of £104,942: these improvements are expected to double the area under irrigation, and raise the profits to 15 per cent. on the outlay: this canal will be protected from injury by the Kashmor Bund; a grant of £6,100 is allotted for the coming year. The Sukkur Canal is approaching completion: its supply is derived from the Indus; the main canal is 75 miles long, and is capable of irrigating 88,250 acres, yielding a revenue of £18,400. The estimated cost of the project is £106,892. The grant for the coming year is £2,440. The Eastern Narra system comprises a series of works extending from the Indus at Rohri to the Runn of Cutch. Provision is made for £6,100 for expenditure during the coming year. The Great Marak Canal in the Hyderabad Collectorate has been enlarged at an estimated cost of £17,008. This work promises to yield a good return for the money spent; the grant for the coming year is £400. A grant of £1,200 is made for works on the Fuleli Canal, chiefly to secure efficient control over the supply of water; the main canal is 95 miles long, and the branches aggregate 986 miles. A small provision of £700 is made for the Krishna Canal which is nearly completed; the estimated cost is £62,341, and it already irrigates 4,000 acres. Progress on all these canals is much restricted by want of funds.

"The total grant assigned is £180,000, of which £47,365 is for works, £79,465 for repairs, and the remainder for establishment and other charges. Of the provision for new works, £2,387 will be spent in the completion of 12 works, estimated to cost £262,068, and on which it is expected that £248,623 will have been spent by end of 1876-77. For other works in progress, the grants for which will not suffice for completion in 1876-77, £27,604 has been given, the estimated cost being £262,068, and the probable outlay to end of 1876-77 £333,392. The balance of the grant for new works has been devoted to sundry small and minor works.

"On irrigation works, commenced in view to give employment to the distressed, £225,000 have been spent from famine relief funds; the total estimated cost of these works being £467,500.

"In Bengal the principal works under investigation, the expenses connected with which are defrayed from the ordinary revenues, are the Tirhut irrigation scheme and the Hooghly irrigation scheme; the expenditure during the current year on the former has been £8,148. A very promising scheme of irrigation from the Gandak River was prepared this year; it consists in diverting a perennial supply from the River Gandak into some natural beds of streams, which in the ordinary course are dry except in the rainy season.

watch their prospects before we commit ourselves to any further great or doubtful operations; the other two consist of improvements and extensions of existing canals—the Bári Doáb and the Western Jamna.

"The Bári Doáb Canal has been yielding revenue since 1860; the estimated cost of the improvements now in progress is £333,114, of which about £135,000 will have been spent to the end of 1876-77. The grant proposed for the coming year is £24,791. The two new branches have been completed, the grant now to be made will be utilised in constructing distributaries. Two new distributaries have been completed on the old portion of the canal. The escape sluices of the weir across the Ravi, at the head of the canal, suffered severely from the floods again this year, but not to the same extent as in 1875: the protective and training works were also slightly damaged.

"In the North-West Provinces the expenditure from the ordinary grant consists almost entirely in minor works and repairs connected with the large canal systems. The subject of drainage has occupied the serious attention of Government, and enquiries have shown that a very large expenditure may prove eventually necessary. During the current year about £65,000 were spent on these works, the cost being shared by Extraordinary funds, Imperial revenues, and Provincial funds. A project for navigable communication between the Ganges Canal and the Agra Canal at Delhi is under consideration by the North-Western Provinces Government.

"In the Panjáb the chief items of expenditure from the ordinary grant are on repairs to the Bárí Doáb and the Western Jamna Canals; a few minor works are in progress and call for no remark.

"In Mysore the grant for the current year is £96,800. Irrigation in this part of India is carried on chiefly from tanks and reservoirs. The principal works in progress are the extension of the North Channel, and the completion of the Seríramdavur dam, the Chikdáwar Sagar Channel, the Sulikerray Series of tanks, the Hussergutta Series of tanks, and various other minor works. There is also a scheme for water-supply to the town and station of Bangalore, at a cost of £56,925, and for the water-supply of the town of Mysore, at a cost of £41,820.

"In British Burma, the principal works under construction are the Irrawaddy embankments, for the protection of the cultivable land along the river; one section, 27 miles long, will protect a hundred and twenty thousand acres; £4,500 are entered for expenditure for next year, which will suffice to complete the work at an estimated cost of £12,353. Three other sections previously completed, with an aggregate length of 154 miles, are to be raised and strengthened at an estimated cost of £30,464, and for these works £40,900 have been allotted for expenditure during the coming year. A grant of £1,000 is also made for the reclamation of the Pegu Plain; this sum will suffice to complete the work at a total cost of £24,954; this work is calculated to reclaim 50,000 acres of good land, and to afford protection to the canal from inundation. The Pegu and Sittang navigable Canal, executed from Provincial funds, at a cost of £118,690, will be completed in the coming year, and will, it is hoped, be open to traffic by April or May 1878.

"In Rájputána, the system of irrigation is from tanks dependent for their supply on local rainfall; the proposed expenditure is on completing and maintaining these tanks, and calls for no special remarks.

"The aggregate construction outlay on irrigation works, ordinary and extraordinary, throughout India, up to the end of the year 1875-76, as booked in the registers of the Public Works Department, amounts to £16,554,690, of which the expenditure shown for Madras and Bombay is open to correction, the accounts not having been completely adjusted.

"The expenditure in Burma has been altogether on flood embankments and protective works; the works in Oudh and the Central Provinces have been abandoned. In the three Provinces, Bengal, the North-West, and Punjab, the aggregate outlay has been £12,348,057, and in these only can a comparison be usefully made of expenditure and returns.

"On the financial results of irrigation works I have already spoken.

"The irrigation from the Orissa, Midnapur, and Tidal Canal is of very slow growth, and it is feared that the income from this source will never, under the present system, yield an adequate return on the Capital that has been invested. The Soane Canal and the Agra Canal have only recently been brought into operation, and there is a fair prospect of their eventually proving profitable undertakings, both directly and indirectly; the condition of the Ganges and Eastern and Western Jumna Canals is very prosperous, and the Bárí Doáb Canal is now yielding a fair income.

"It will be premature for me here now to do more than to allude to the proposals for a future localization of irrigation works. I have from my arrival in India felt that the success of some, if not of all these works, would be better secured if they were the outcome of local sacrifice and self-denial rather than of Government munificence alone, and that local interests and local duties should call this class of improvement into existence. Indeed, without ignoring altogether the responsibilities of the State towards the land, resting on the assurance of those who know India better than I do, and who understand the relations of the landholders to the cultivator, I would wish to see no work of irrigation commenced till those who expected the benefit had either subscribed the Capital or had given a guarantee for the interest of the work which has to be undertaken from the Loan funds. I am inclined to draw a distinction between lands, such as those in Sind, in Burmah, and in Bengal too to some small extent, which need protection from flood. I will not dwell further on this matter, leaving time to thoroughly work out what is needed to effect a change in policy, from which, if care and caution are exercised to give it effect in its earlier stages, I, for one, believe infinite benefit will ultimately arise, though, for the moment, extreme advocates for irrigation may not acquiesce in the chances of very rapid development.

"Early in last year, with the assent of Lord Northbrook, I suggested such a course in reference to a very extensive scheme put forward for the protection of Behar against the recurrence of the disasters of 1874, and for the mitigation of the normal misery of that overcrowded district. The response I received from the then Government of Bengal gave but little hope that any means could be relied upon beyond the usual one of the work being undertaken by the Indian Treasury. I trust that the present Government of Bengal will be able to show that its predecessor was deceived.

"I am also now in communication with the Government of the Panjáb on a project lately submitted by it, in order to ascertain if the work can be undertaken on the conditions we are now seeking to establish.

"The extension to Local Governments of administrative control, with a simultaneous increase of their responsibilities, cannot fail, if guarantees are taken for the continuity of a fixed and stable policy (the difficulty of all personal government subject to a short tenure), to result in greater local efficiency even if it does not secure greater economy and thrift in outlay.

"Of the application of the same principle of local management to Railways, I confess I do not myself entertain a favourable opinion, unless, indeed, full powers on questions of principle are reserved in the hands of a central authority; for the essential feature of Railway success—I mean financial success—is an arrangement for the public service at once simple, rapid, certain, and this can only be secured by unity and harmony in administration. To localize entirely the control of Railways would increase their cost in management, and re-introduce the worst features of the early European system, which all Railway administrators are now hoping to see followed by a more automatic system.

"I hope to see this principle thoroughly recognised in this country at no distant date, and the whole Railway system of India guided by one authority, whilst the improving and increasing revenue is devoted to the further development of the system itself.

"It is possible, perhaps, whilst enlisting the co-operation of the Local Government, in aiding the sources and development of Railway traffic, not to weaken Railway administration; if this can be secured, the experiment is, however, worth a trial.

"I have now, My Lord, to ask the Council's attention for a few minutes to the prospect of our State Railways.

"The length of State Railways open for traffic, under construction, and under survey at the close of 1876 was 2,720 miles, of which 170 miles are either Provincial or the property of foreign States, leaving 2,550 miles chargeable to Imperial Public Works Extraordinary. Of this length about 800 miles are now open for traffic, and 1,100 miles are under construction. On the remainder, construction operations have not yet been commenced.

"During the past year the increase to the open mileage has not been large, the additional length permanently opened being only 128 miles, distributed over the Rajpootana, Punjab, Northern, Tirhut, Holkar, and Nímuch lines. The Rájpootána line was opened throughout.

"On the Indus Valley Railway 110 miles have been temporarily opened between Multan and Chuni Gote for the goods traffic of the Flotilla.

"During the ensuing year a much greater addition to the open mileage is expected, which will make up the aggregate length to about 1,500 miles, thus maintaining the projected average of 300 miles a year since the date of first opening. The chief additions will be on the Indus Valley, Northern Bengal and Rangoon and Irrawaddy Valley Lines, on which it is expected that 660 miles will be opened for public traffic.

"The total Imperial extraordinary expenditure up to the close of 1875-76 was £11,785,492.

"The estimated expenditure during the current year 1876-77 is £2,788,000, and the estimate for the ensuing year is £2,728,000, which will raise the total expenditure at the close of 1877-78 to about £17,300,000.

"The grant for the coming year provides for steady progress on the lines already under construction and for a commencement of the extension of the Panjáb Northern Railway to Ráwalpindi, and of the Western Rájputána Railway.

"It has been necessary in the present state of the finances to restrict the grant for the latter to only £100,000. And, for the same reason, other lines on which a small commencement should be made, so as to carry forward the extension of our railways with regularity, must I fear be postponed.

"These are the Chattísgarh Line from Nágpur, and the Nímuch-Nasirabad link of the Central Indian system. The extension of the Northern Bengal Railway to the foot of the hills, a distance of about 30 miles, is also a work which, I still trust, may be pushed on if our prospects brighten in the coming autumn.

"In the course of the last month the earth-works of two railways, the claims of which had already been before the Government, have been authorised as famine relief works. These are the Dhond and Munmar, forming a chord above the Ghâts between the north-east and south-east lines of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway, and which, if existing, would be especially valuable in the present crisis; and an extension of the Madras Railway from Bellary to Hubli. This last line when carried out will not be complete without an outlet on the western coast.

"As in the case of the famine of 1874, when the construction of certain lines had to be anticipated, so now these lines must be accepted as divergences from the fixed programme of our railway-scheme.

"With an annual appropriation of three millions approximately for railways, we ought to be prepared to put in hand about 400 miles of line yearly. As respects future extensions therefore, it may be mentioned that we have surveys in progress for lines in Burma towards the frontier;—from Assam on the east to Tirhut on the west;—from Ráwalpindi to Pesháwar; and from Sukkur towards the western frontier.

"The receipts from the open lines are for the current year estimated at about £370,000, with a mean open mileage of 742 distributed over eight different lines.

"The nett receipts are estimated at £105,000.

"The State Railway system is burdened with several small detached lines, such as the Nalhati, Calcutta and South-Eastern and Wardah Valley. The last will, it is hoped, prove particularly valuable as a mineral branch. It also serves the cotton mart of Hingunghât. Of others, such as the Panjáb Northern, Holkar, Nímuch and Tirhut, small sections only are as yet opened for traffic. The open mileage of these seven lines aggregates only 360 miles. This want of continuity is unavoidable, but so long as it lasts the traffic cannot be large, and the expenses of working must be disproportionately high.

I have already stated that portions of the Northern Panjáb and Indus Valley Railways are now open for traffic, and the rapid development of trade, especially on the former, even with the very limited rolling-stock available, already shows nett receipts in excess of working expenses which justify these works being classed as Extraordinary.

"And this consideration leads me to refer to the change which seems to be proposed in carrying out the policy for Extraordinary works, by which no works so classed will be aided by loan money unless they are likely to be fully remunerative, and instead of its being required, as formerly laid down by the Secretary of State, that no loan money spent on a work shall be treated as Extraordinary, except where the yield will cover the interest on the loan, it will be required that no loan money shall be spent on a work except where the yield will cover the interest on the whole cost. Heretofore the policy has really been to combine the employment of Loan Funds with that of surplus ordinary revenue, so as on the one hand to expedite the progress of the works, and on the other to keep down the real interest for borrowed money, in order to avoid burdening the future.

"Thus, when a work has been considered reasonably certain to pay say 3 per cent. on its total cost, or even 2 per cent., it has been thought proper to allow of its inclusion in the category of Extraordinary works in expectation that so much of its cost would be defrayed by ordinary revenue, that the remaining portion defrayed by borrowed money would have its interest covered by the yield; and this has prevented the progress of the work being retarded to only such a pace as would have been possible from the exclusive employment of the current revenues.

"Further, it is to be considered that the system of Extraordinary State Railways is mainly a system for constructing railways by the use of funds raised by Government direct, instead of by the use of funds raised by Guaranteed Companies.

"There is no more unsoundness, so far as I can see, in the financial policy that would commit the State to the liability for interest on funds raised by itself, than to the policy that commits it to liability for interest raised by Guaranteed Companies; and I think that no one will venture to deny that the liability so incurred has been fully justified, and that the policy was a sound one.

"Next year the gross receipts from a mean open mileage of 1,230, distributed over 11 different lines, are expected to amount to £675,000, and the nett receipts to a little over £190,000.

"The receipts per mile open per week average about £10 only. This is a small figure compared with the earnings of some of the trunk lines, but its increase depends on the gradual completion of a system.

"For example, the only State line of considerable length as yet open throughout is the Rájputána Railway 400 miles long. The last section of this line was opened in February 1876, and in the same half-year the nett receipts from a gross traffic, £13 per mile per week, returned 5 per cent. per annum on the capital outlay.

"I have seen it stated that the State lines have been constructed at a much greater cost than the Guaranteed lines, and their average mileage cost has been criticised. It is unnecessary to enter into the details of such a question on this occasion, but the fullest information will be published hereafter. For the present I think it sufficient to say that the comparative outlay on particular works, and the several conditions under which they have been undertaken and constructed, can be accounted for, and that their cost compares favourably with the lines of other countries. Whether the sums advanced under the guarantee had been excessive or the reverse, the Companies in India owe their prosperity to the fact that they obtained their capital at a moderate rate of interest in virtue of the Government guarantee.

"It has been more than once asserted that the policy which was inaugurated by Lord Hardinge, and to which Lord Dalhousie gave life and vigour, was a policy which has led to great loss and extravagance. My Lord, such loss and extravagance, if there has been either one or the other, are absolutely insignificant when compared with what has been realised by the Americans, and by other nations who have not enjoyed the credit which India could always command, and who from this want of sufficient means were forced to adopt a cheaper and less durable type of road. The heavier outlay had to be incurred at last, and the final cost of the railroads in those countries will be found to exceed, eventually the first and permanent outlay upon our Indian lines.

"The special standard gauge of India was, without doubt, an error into which I myself fell when introducing railways into Australia in 1855 and subsequent years, but I believed then with those who also advised the Government of India that the battle of the gauges would result in a compromise, and that the 5 feet 6 inches gauge would be the universal standard.

"The result of this controversy subsequently led in this country to the unfortunate break of gauge by the further adoption of the metre gauge; and, although, no doubt, this latter gives on its first cost a better return than is secured on the outlay on a wider gauge, still I question whether a more extended working will secure as large a proportion of profits as the traffic developes.

"Had the early founders of the Indian railways adopted the 4 feet 8½ inch standard guage of England, I am confident that our lines would long since have been paying a handsome subsidy to the Indian Treasury, that the extent of our railway system would have been far greater, and that we should not have been afflicted with the curse of a break of gauge.

"The Guaranteed Railway system in India was extended during the year ending 31st December 1876, by the opening of a portion of the South Indian Railway in Madras, and by the completion of a short branch of the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway in Bombay.

"The total number of miles open at the end of 1876 was 5,899, against 5,693 miles at the close of 1875.

"Disasters to bridges occurred in Bombay and the Panjáb. Twenty-five spans of the Narbada Bridge on the Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway were swept away by floods, and three spans of the Sutlej Bridge on the Sindh and Panjáb line were destroyed, both accidents causing temporary stoppage of traffic upon the damaged sections.

"It is estimated that the total capital withdrawals for expenditure on Guaranteed Railway and the Madras Irrigation and Canal Companies, to 31st March 1877, will be £95,788,000, which includes a sum of £372,000, the balance of a loan of £600,000 obtained for works by the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company from the Secretary of State.

Divided thus—

Expenditure in England	42,628,000
„ in India	53,160,000

"Deducting the capital invested in the Madras Irrigation and Canal Company, the nett expenditure on Guaranteed Railways will be £94,116,000.

"The amount of capital, which it is estimated will be remaining in the hands of Government, belonging to Guaranteed Railway Companies, on the 31st March 1877, is £420,631, which may be distributed over the various railways as follows :—

E. I. Railway, Main Line, at their credit ...	69,227

Sindh, Panjáb and Delhi Railway (credit)	577,283
Total credits to railways ...	779,136
Debits to railways	358,505

"Taking into consideration a sum of £514,100, which the Secretary of State estimates will be received on account of capital during the year 1877-78, it is estimated that, looking at the Guaranteed Railways as a whole, all the funds belonging to them will be exhausted, and a further sum of £343-1-11 expended.

"The details of these figures are—

"It will be seen from the above that some provision of funds will have to be made to meet expenditure.

"The gross earnings for 1876-77 were estimated for the Budget at £7,888,000, they are now expected to reach £9,499,000, this large increase is due principally to the following exceptional causes.

"The impetus given to the grain traffic by the famine in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies; the activity in the export trade of grain, created in some measure by the adverse rate of exchange, and further stimulated by the reduction in the rates for long carriage of grain on the East Indian Railway; and the Imperial Assemblage at Delhi.

"The working expenses for the Budget of 1876-77 were estimated at £4,238,000, they are now likely to amount to £4,937,000. The net traffic receipts were estimated at £3,650,000, they will now probably amount to £4,562,000.

"The moiety of surplus profits payable to share-holders was reckoned at £179,000 for the Budget-Estimate of 1876-77, it will now amount to £274,000.

"The gross interest payable under guarantee is expected to be £4,708,000 against the Budget-Estimate of £4,730,000, from which, if the amount of net traffic receipts, less the moiety repayable to shareholders, be deducted, the remainder £420,000 will represent the loss to the State for the year against the Budget-Estimate of £1,259,000.

"The gross earnings for the Budget year 1877-78 are estimated at £8,553,300, which is less than the amount expected to be realized during 1876-77 by £945,700, owing to the abnormally heavy traffic in food grains going to the famine districts, to the increased exportations by the fall in the rate of exchange, and to the exceptional receipts of the Delhi Assemblage in the latter year.

"The gross receipts budgetted for next year amount in the gross to a little more than was put down in the Budget for the current year and than the actuals for the year 1875-76. If, however, the sums set against each railway are examined, it will be seen that there is a fair increase expected on all railways except two,—the Great Indian Peninsula and Sindh, Panjáb and Delhi Railways,—whose receipts are taken at £134,000 less than 1875-76. The decrease in the former is trifling, but that on the Sindh, Panjáb and Delhi amounts to nearly £400,000, the cause being that in the year 1875-76 a large sum which had been debited to Revenue was written back to the debit of Capital, and consequently increased out of all normal proportion the gross earnings. The normal actuals of 1875-76 might, therefore, be considered as about £7,884,000, and the Budget is some £670,000 more than this.

"Unfortunately, the working expenses are not affected in the same way, but have to be set down for a progressive traffic, and in some cases to provide for the inevitable heavy repairs which must follow the unprecedented rush of grain traffic caused principally by the wants of the famine districts of Bombay and Madras, and partly by the expansion of the export trade of wheat and seeds. If, as may be hoped, this trade becomes a permanent and prosperous one, we may look for considerable and steady enhancement of receipts, but the carrying resources of both the Great Indian Peninsula and East Indian Railways have been severely strained, and on the latter railway it has been determined to build more rolling-stock to enable them to carry all that is offered.

"But building rolling-stock takes time, and probably the coming official year will have run nearly its whole length before the necessary additional carrying accommodation is provided.

"A further fact has to be borne in mind, namely, that while, in consequence of the enormous traffic which has been carried during this official year, very large surplus-profits in excess of the guaranteed interest have been earned, the payment to the shareholders of the moiety of these heavy surplus-profits falls in the next official year, and this tends to put next year's transactions in a comparatively unfavorable light.

	1875-76.	1876-77.	1877-78.
Guaranteed interest	4,688,000	4,708,000	4,766,000
Deduct—
Nett receipts	3,713,000	4,288,000	3,716,000
Loss	975,000	420,000	1,000,000

"But of the sum of £1,000,000 shown as the nett charge against the State for 1877-78, an amount of £250,000 may at least be taken as representing the excess moiety of surplus-profits earned during the preceding year, but paid to shareholders in that year, so that if each official year could have been made to bear the burden of its own moiety of surplus-profits, 1876-77 would have cost the State about £670,000 and 1877-78 about £750,000.

"In order to form an opinion of the different undertakings paying or falling short of the guarantee, a table of average receipts per mile per week and probable ratio of expenses to gross average receipts has been prepared, based upon the Regular Estimate for the year 1876-77:—

"These results are approximate only because the receipts towards the close of the year are necessarily only estimated, and an analysis of accounts has not been made. But they are sufficiently accurate to show which of the undertakings are profitable, and to which of them attention must be directed to endeavour to foster traffic and produce better results for the future.

"There are two methods open for the purpose of producing better financial results on railways in India: the first by measures to promote traffic, the second by means of more economical working.

"These two methods, however, really must work in unison. Cheap working of railways will induce cheap freight-charges, and cheap freight-charges will undoubtedly promote traffic; but no economy of this nature can be true, if the efficiency of the railway is affected by the measures taken to introduce it.

"It is only necessary to glance at the table of expenses and receipts to observe that some of the most expensive and efficient lines in India pay the Railway Companies, and in some cases it is not always apparent that the interests of the Public and of the shareholders are for the time being identical. The Government of India may be said to have a life interest in the railways, whilst the shareholders are tenants for a term only, and circumstances may occur which place reforms and reductions of rates in the light of too far distant benefits to recompense the present holders of the railway stock.

"In order to promote the most healthy discussion of all matters connected with railway administration in India, not only as regards the older Guaranteed Railways, but also for the benefit of the new State lines, a Railway Conference was convened during the past year, from which it was hoped substantial results would accrue. The extent of the calamity in Madras and Bombay rendered it necessary, however, for all railway men to be at their posts, and for a time this gathering has had to be postponed.

"I am pleased, however, to be able to report that one very important enquiry has been satisfactorily completed. I refer to the matter of military transport by rail. Enquiries have been conducted by Committees of Officers during the past cold seasons, in regard to the capacities of our stock and the arrangements provided on the Continent for the transport of sick and wounded, &c., have been reported on by an Officer who visited the Exhibition at Brussels in August last for this purpose.

"With this information before us it is hoped that steps may be shortly taken to give practical effect to the suggestions that have been offered, so that the full advantage of our railway-system may be realized in the assistance it will give to the Army at all times.

"The traffic, both passenger and goods, on lines in India, has had an upward tendency of late years, and which I will state in detail—

Year.	Mean miles of Railway open.	Passenger.		Goods.		Remarks.
		Passenger carried over one mile of Railway.	Average number of passenger per mean mile open.	Gross tons of goods booked.	Average tons per means mile open.
		Millions.

"Reductions in fares and the increased comfort of travellers will doubtless induce larger traffic receipts, in the same manner that reduced freight rates and a liberal classification will bring about increased goods traffic; but these reforms must be dependent in a measure upon decreased expenses. Decreased working cost of railway is dependent upon many causes, but the chief agent in effecting economy, and one with which the Government of this country has greatly to do, is the cost of fuel.

"Of late the East Indian Railway coal yield at Karharbáli has greatly increased, and the expense of getting coal has decreased to perhaps a minimum of 5*s*. per ton. The Company has also reduced its carrying charge from one-fifth to one-sixth of a pie per maund per mile, and now the Bengal coal is carried as far north as Lahore, as far west as Jabalpur and Ajmer, and is used on the Oudh and Rohilkhund system of lines.

"It is not too much to say that the cost of coal limits, so far as railway carriage is concerned, the horizon of the paying export of the products of India.

"Cheap coal will render possible long inland carriage of Indian grains to the sea-ports far beyond sea export. The movement of products will produce return trade, and thus the question of the development of the Indian coal industry becomes one of national as well as of railway importance.

"The prime cost of getting coal at the pit's mouth affects the matter but little. Taking the present East Indian Railway ruling rates of 5*s*. a ton forgetting, and one-sixth of a pie per maund for carriage, it may be assumed that the cost of getting is equal to 100 miles of carriage only, and therefore to distribute coal cheaply throughout India, new coal measures in different parts of the land must be worked, and connecting lines of railway must be made.

"It is an imperative duty to foster this subject. A commencement has been made in the Narbada Valley, and a coal line to the Warora Collieries has been opened during the past year, and the use of the coal from these fields is extending in Western India.

"But much remains to be done. Excellent coal has been found in Assam, which will afford a supply to Northern, and ultimately to North-Eastern, Bengal. Coal has been found in the valley of the Godávari, which may, when connecting lines of railway have been made, afford a profitable supply to Madras and for the southern portion of the Great Indian Peninsula system of Railways.

"The manufacture of iron generally follows the discovery and use of coal in all countries, and India is not an exception to this rule. During the past year an Iron Manufacturing Company in Bengal has assumed a definite form, and good results have been obtained from experiments with ore in England. I am also in hope that we may be able to start iron-works at no distant date in connection with the coal of the Warda Valley.

"To railways this industry is as important almost as the discovery and cheap distribution of coal. Maintenance of works as well as original construction will be cheaply carried out, and Government, in giving aid to the Iron Manufacturing Company, has confidence that no truer principles of political economy can be exercised in India than those of supplying Indian wants from Indian markets.

"The cessation of all action by State agency in India for material progress and development is strongly advocated by certain eminent public men. The facts and figures I have given, are, My Lord, not exaggerated or cooked, and I think that they tend to show that the administration of these matters by the State has not been wholly mismanaged, and I venture to think that, compared with any number of similar enterprises undertaken solely by private agency and directed by the keenest self-interest, the result will not be given against the Public Works of India.

"Not many months ago I saw a very strong attack calling in question the construction of railways in Southern India, and asserting that it had been premature. It is true that they have not paid as yet the full guaranteed interest, but I venture to think that the part they are at this present moment playing in taking food to the famishing, and otherwise perishing millions of Southern India is, in money saving value alone, beyond its debt to the public Treasury of India for arrears, setting aside the preservation of human lives, a view it is possible the authors would not recognise.

Having described the material operations and the financial positions of the Public Works in India, I would ask, My Lord, to be permitted to say a few words in reference to those who are entrusted with the control and direction of those operations, the magnitude and variety of which can best be comprehended by the statement—dry and hard although from its very nature it must be which I have just made.

"Of the Officers more directly responsible to Government, I can only say, that I believe them trustworthy and in every way well qualified for their position. I am confident that no nation in the world possesses a body of more able, conscientious, and honourable workers than are the Engineers of India; and, My Lord, I should be deceiving myself and deceiving you if I did not here publicly record my thorough conviction that this body has claims to consideration at the hands of the Government and public of India.

"From the nature of its original composition and development, the present organization does not tend to timely retirement and to such a rapid flow of promotion as is desirable, and it is under this condition of things, with remedies deferred and incentives to work withheld, that the man is disheartened and his energy damped.

"It may be years before the disheartening effect of the prejudicial influences I have noticed is fully felt in the moral and discipline of such a zealous body of men; but where the interests of the Government and country, and the very lives, I may say of the people, are dependent on the labours of this section of our Indian community no grievance should be allowed to remain.

"There is another subject on which much has been said and written, and that is the employment of Natives and the displacement of Europeans on our Railways. On this point I wish clearly to say that the views of the Government of India, if I understand them aright, are that, without discouraging Europeans, every encouragement will be given to the efficient training of Natives for all kinds of suitable work on our lines; not on the grounds of its being a possibly cheaper course—a matter of minor importance when safety of life or limb is at stake, but on the ground that this system will open up to the Natives of India a means by which they can gain strength and self-reliance, and may supplement, rather than supplant, Europeans.

"To show how large has been the field of fresh industrial occupation thus extended to the people of both races, I would, My Lord, call attention to the following facts:—At the end of last September, the length of our open lines aggregated some 6,600 miles. Without taking into consideration the number employed upon the lines under construction, there was engaged in the higher or general administration, such as Agency, Audit, Pay, Stores, Medical, &c., an establishment of 305 Europeans, 240 East Indians, and 8,059 Natives. On Traffic and Telegraphs there were 861 Europeans, 1,038 East Indians, and 22,759 Natives. In the Engineers' Branch, 327 were Europeans, 227 East Indians, and 40,670 were Natives. In the Locomotive and Carriage Establishments, 1,539 Europeans, 1,245 East Indians, and 29,766 Natives. Thus making a total of 3,032 Europeans, 2,750 East Indians, and 1,01,251 Natives, and besides this nearly all of the 784 Railway Stations are in charge of educated Natives as Station Masters. These figures, My Lord, speak for themselves, and testify that on our Railways there is a large field open for the employment of Natives. The advantage to the bulk being in their constant intercourse during daily work with an industrious and pains-taking class of the European community, and to the more fairly educated in habits of order and independence which their duties of more or less responsibility are sure to inculcate.

"I have, I fear, gone into such detail that possibly the great characteristics and leading features of Indian Public Works, in which the State has assumed the position that in other countries is taken by private or associated enterprize, may have been lost; and I would venture before concluding the more especially to draw attention to them because this year the wave of our revenue receipts has topped over that of annual liabilities or expenditure for interest on total outlay. It is possible, doubtless, that this is due to exceptional circumstances, but I believe that even giving full credit for those circumstances, the next year and those following it will find these relations unchanged.

"In dealing with the Budget for Extraordinary Works the actual proposed outlay is not the point to be considered so much as the state of the revenue and liabilities.

"The practical mode of dealing with them is to compare the whole revenue of all remunerative works with the interest on all Extraordinary outlay.

"I will state more fully what I mean.

"The account stands thus—

The real cost to the State of the Ordinary Public Works Department is ... ... (This is an outlay not of a remunerative character.)	2,105,000
To this should be added the grant from Imperial to Provincial funds for Public Works	1,400,000
Making the whole cost to the State of Public Works other than those which are meant to be remunerative	3,500,000
The interest annually payable on Guaranteed Capital is ...	4,710,000
The interest payable on the up-to-date capital of extraordinary works is	1,170,000
Total	5,880,000

"Against this there is a total revenue of £5,985,000 made up as under—

Direct irrigation	5,000
Railway...	3,670,000	5,985,000
Enhanced land in Madras, Bombay, North-Western Provinces, and Panjáb ...	2,310,000
In Madras the Irrigation outlay is a Public Works charge, while virtually none of the Revenue due to Irrigation (which is undeniably enormous, at least £2,000,000 is credited to Public Works), but to Land Revenue, leaving a gain to the State of		105,000

"Even supposing that this gain did not exist, that the indirect revenue from Irrigation were less than what we claim it to be, this account shows that the annual outlay of the State for interest on the capital of Guaranteed Railways and of Extraordinary Works is met by the nett profits from our remunerative Public Works; and that, therefore, as matters stand at present, these remunerative works are no burden at all on the tax-payer, even though interest is included on outlay which has as yet given no returns, although these returns are certain yet to come.

"I think, then, we may assume that, whatever they may have been in the past, these works can hardly in any sense now be considered as burdens, conferring as they do incalculable benefits upon the country by increasing enormously its prospective wealth and prosperity. In fact, in the aggregate, they now meet all the annual liabilities we have incurred upon them.

"You have, My Lord, in Council, already conveyed to Colonel Dickens, the late Secretary of the Public Works Department, a public recognition of his services to the State. But I seize this occasion to acknowledge the great personal obligation I owe to him for the cordial aid and co-operation which he has afforded me, and which with his experience has lightened my labours in connection with the Public Works of India."

His Honour THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL said, that the hon'ble member who had preceded him had remarked that any discussion on the general policy of the Financial Statement would be out of order, and that it was not permissible to discuss anything but the Bills before the Council without the consent of the President. This in his opinion was a misapprehension; for the Bills were the outcome of the Financial Statement, and therefore it was quite open to discuss the measures set forth without enquiring into the details of the Bills.

He had no remarks to make about the Bills in their present state, but he did wish to say that he had, in common with those who had preceded him listened to the statement with great interest, and he desired to join with them in congratulating the hon'ble gentleman in charge of the Financial Department on the frankness and clearness with which he had explained the position of Government. On the whole, the financial position of the country, though at first sight it might seem gloomy and discouraging, was not, he thought, altogether unsatisfactory. It seemed to be the case that, if India could only be secured against a recurrence of the calamities by which she was now so frequently visited, her ordinary revenue would amply meet her expenditure. But these visitations had now become so chronic, that it was absolutely necessary to take the probability of their recurrence into consideration in making a forecast of the finance of coming years; and he thought therefore, that the Government of India had followed the only course open to it in determining to permanently increase its revenue to the extent necessary to meet these extraordinary calls without periodically upsetting the whole of the financial arrangements of the country. Nothing was so bad for the country as the doubt and uncertainty arising from a state of things under which works sanctioned, and actually in course of construction, were suddenly stopped in the middle of the year, and the whole machinery of administration thrown out of gear by the necessity for retrenchment, in consequence of some unforeseen call upon Government.

The necessities of the Government of India at the present time had, as his hon'ble friend had explained, thrown upon the Local Governments, and especially upon the Government of Bengal, very heavy burdens; but entirely recognising as an undeniable fact that Government had no alternative between perpetual financial difficulty, and a permanent increase of its revenues, and their re-establishment on a safe basis, he readily agreed to accept his share of the responsibility of raising an increased revenue, and felt sure that the urgency of the case would be fully recognised by the people of Bengal, and that he would receive the cordial co-operation of the officers of the Bengal Government, and of the people themselves, in giving effect to the measures involved in the change of system which had been explained to the Council. Bengal had, in her own calamity, much reason to be thankful for the ready aid offered to her in the time of her need, and would not grudge her contribution in aid of other provinces now suffering from a similar trouble.

If, in the face of the frequently recurring casualties which might at any time arise, and which might take the shape of drought, floods, war or other national calamity, the Government was to keep its head above water at all, he believed that the transfer of its liabilities for the interest on extraordinary works to the provinces for whose benefit, protection, or development these works had been undertaken, was the best and most appropriate solution of the question. He believed that the principle of making each province pay for its own extraordinary works of the third of the classes into which his hon'ble friend had divided works of this description, was thoroughly sound, and he was confident that it would at once secure greater caution in the adoption of schemes intended to be reproductive, and at the same time give a great impetus to the prosecution of really sound and substantial schemes. It would be a great security to the Local Government in working out large schemes, to feel that each province practically had the matter in its own hands, and that works once undertaken and progressing would not be liable to be stopped in consequence of financial difficulty in a totally different part of the country. He took it for granted that it was intended that, if a provincial Government showed that it was able to meet the interest on its loans, there would be no difficulty made in assigning to it such money as it wanted for approved schemes, so far as the borrowing powers of the Government would permit.

He entirely agreed in the principle which his hon'ble friend had enunciated in respect to the propriety of making the maintenance of such works as irrigation and canals a charge upon the people for whose direct and immediate benefit they were constructed, so far as this could be done. If they were to keep up a supply of water for the use of the people of particular parts of the country specially exposed to droughts, and to make this water always available to them to use or leave unused, as the seasons may make it convenient to them, they must make them pay for the certainty of a sufficient quantity of water for agricultural purposes which was thus assured to them. They could not close their works and dismiss their establishments in wet years, and open them again in dry years. The works must be permanently constructed on a scale involving the expenditure of a large amount of capital, and a large establishment must always be maintained to protect and preserve the works, and meet any demands for water that are made on them. Obviously the only proper way of meeting the interest on the capital thus locked up, and the expenses of this establishment, was by levying a fixed but moderate rate on all lands protected and secured from risk by the works, and to which they were prepared to turn on water whenever it was demanded. Ordinarily, no doubt, the whole cost of such works should fall upon that part of the country only which was benefited by it. Unfortunately, Bengal was peculiarly situated in respect to some of her irrigation-works. It inherited two great schemes, the Orissa and Soane schemes, from a private Company. The whole works were on an extravagant and wasteful scale, and though in the course of a few years the Soane scheme might, with a compulsory rate, be made to pay its own way, the Orissa works never could pay. Under these peculiar circumstances they could not saddle the people of the districts concerned with the whole cost of the works, but must make them pay all that they could afford to pay, and recover the rest from the province at large. Though it was unfair that the people of one province should pay for works of this class constructed in another province, the same objection did not exist to the imposition of a general rate on a province in aid of certain districts of the same province. The whole province must be treated as a unit, and it was no doubt true that a whole province benefited by anything which was done to improve a large portion of it. If it were not for these irrigation-works, the time might well come again, as it had come before, when the whole of Bengal might be called upon to suffer for the misfortunes of Orissa and Bihár; and therefore the whole of Bengal may very well be called upon to pay a light tax as an insurance against such risk.

The case of railways was different to that of canals, and he did not go quite so far here as his hon'ble friend seemed disposed to do. He did not think that railways should be a charge upon the districts through which they passed. In the first place, no railways should be undertaken by Local Governments, unless they would pay directly in some form or another, and for the future there should be no permanent charges on the revenue for the outlay incurred on their account. But if the liability for paying the first cost of a railway were thrown upon the district through which it ran, no railways would in future be made. The people of a district through which a railway passed benefited, no doubt, by the rise in prices which resulted from improved facilities of communication with large markets; but the people of the province at large also gained, and might be held liable for their share of the guarantee of interest. For instance, the new Northern Bengal Railway would bring into market the tobacco of Rungpore at a much lower cost than had hitherto been incurred for boats and cart-carriage. Part of the benefit of this would go to the producer in the shape of the increase of price which the dealers would be able to give under the stimulus of competition; but part would go to the consumers who would have their tobacco laid down at a lower cost. Therefore, while he would enforce as much as possible the liability of districts for irrigation-works and works of direct benefit on the land, he would make the whole province pay the cost of making railways and works of indirect benefit. The onus of expenditure which the Government of India had shifted from its own shoulders to those of Bengal, amounted to twenty-seven and-a-half lákhs of rupees; but he hoped, as his hon'ble friend had said, that he should be able to meet the new liabilities he had thus incurred without any very heavy taxation, and to avoid altogether any new form or method of taxation.

He had to express on his own behalf, and on behalf of Local Governments generally, his acknowledgments for the proof of confidence which had been shown in them in the increased powers of control and administration now conferred on them. He believed that the result of giving Local Governments a more immediate interest in the financial working of the various departments of State would lead to a better understanding between the Supreme and subordinate Governments.

So far it had been a pleasure to him to feel that the views of his hon'ble friend were entirely in accordance with his own. He must now glance at certain expressions of opinion on his part in which he found himself entirely unable to concur. They were, it was true, as he had just explained, only expressions of his own opinion, for they related to no immediate financial results; and it might therefore be thought that it would be better to let them pass. But though they did not take any practical form as applied to the present year's estimates, they did seem to contain a threat as to the future, and at first appeared to pledge the Governor General in Council to a course of action which, he thought, in the interests of the Government as well as the public, called for some explanation. And this explanation had now been given, and with a generosity and sincerity which reflected the highest credit on his hon'ble friend's feelings. He might, he felt sure, take upon himself to say that the explanation of his hon'ble friend would be considered entirely satisfactory by all those who took a different view of the question at issue from his hon'ble friend. He alluded he need hardly say, to his friend's remarks on the abolition of customs-duties, and of cotton-duties especially.

His hon'ble friend had commenced by telling them that their ordinary revenues were just sufficient to meet all ordinary and normal charges, but that it was absolutely necessary to establish a sufficient margin to enable the Government to meet with certainty, not only the charges for famine-relief, but, to quote his own words, "for other demands which cannot be foreseen, but which will inevitably occur." And to enable the Government to do this, it was explained that very heavy liabilities had been thrown upon the Governments of Bengal and the North-Western Provinces, which those Governments, recognising the emergency of the case, had agreed to bear. Believing that the absolute necessities of the State were, as he had already said, the sole cause of the obligations imposed upon Bengal, he had most loyally accepted that obligation. He need hardly say that he had at first been much startled to find that, though their necessities were as great as his hon'ble friend had represented them to be, he had not hesitated to volunteer an apparent pledge that cotton-duties, representing more than three-quarters of a million, should be abolished on the first opportunity, and had proceeded to suggest a further intention eventually to abolish all customs-duties; that was to say, to give up indirect revenue, regarding which not a single murmur or complaint had been heard, amounting to two-and-a-half millions, and of course, as he presumed, to impose in its place direct taxation to a similar amount; for there was no prospect whatever held out to them of such a reduction of expenditure as would place them in a position to dispense with this enormous sum.

Of course he could not say at the time when his hon'ble friend's statement was made, how far this pledge and this policy were the personal pledge and policy of his hon'ble friend, and an indication of his individual resolve to advance, with all the persistence and ability of which he was the master, a theory of ideal taxation which had possessed his mind, as he was aware, for many years; or how far they were the outcome of a deliberate conclusion of the entire Government. He was delighted to find from the further explanation given to-day, that the former hypothesis was the correct one; for he did not hesitate to say that immense mischief would have been done by an announcement that, while pressing the Local Government to tax the pettiest trader in the North-Western Provinces and throw increased burdens on the peasantry of Bengal, the Government of India had formed a deliberate conception of a financial policy which was not only to comply with the demands of the Manchester mill-owners, but which was to lead up to an eventual abolition of the customs-duties—in fact, to remit the one single form of taxation which pressed upon European residents in India. He was glad now to find that Government had no such intention, and that his hon'ble friend fully recognised the impossibility of taking off any duties so long as they would have to be replaced by fresh taxation.

For his own part THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR believed that there was no form of taxation so sound, so productive, and so little open to objection as the indirect revenue raised by customs-duties. His hon'ble friend had alluded to the huge establishment which the collection of customs involved, and had spoken as if he thought it an irritating and wasteful form of taxation. But there was the simple fact that in the Custom-house of Calcutta alone, a revenue of three-and-a-half millions was collected at a cost of less than three per cent. It was paid by the bulk of the people without their being brought into contact with the tax-collector, and without their even knowing that any tax was raised. The peculiar fitness of customs-duties as a main feature of Indian revenue had most admirably been described by the late Viceroy in his speech on the Tariff Bill in 1875. Lord Northbrook's arguments he believed to be quite unanswerable; at all events, no one had ever attempted to answer them up to the present time.

If the rate of duty was injurious to any particular article of trade, by all means let that be rectified; but he believed that it would be extremely difficult to show that the rate now levied on any article was having a mischievous effect on trade. Of all the customs-duties, the one which was perhaps the least open to objection in practical application, as it appeared to many thinking-men, was the duty on the finer qualities of cotton-goods. It was levied on an article of general use, and was therefore productive; and it was so adjusted that the rich paid a higher rate than the poor. The poor man bought his cheap cloth and paid a low duty; the rich man bought a better cloth and paid a higher duty. He could not regret too much that the question of the conflicting interests of England and India had been brought into the question. It was not, he agreed with his hon'ble friend, a question of different interests; for the only point of view from which he believed the Government of India could look at the matter was from a purely financial point of view. He hoped the day was far distant when such questions should in this country, as unfortunately had been the case in other countries, be decided in favour of the class or interest, which made the most noise, and could make itself most heard and felt. What had to be considered was this, are these duties financially sound or unsound? Can the revenue which they produce be spared or not? If they were financially unsound, they defeated their own object, and would fail to bring in the revenue for which they were imposed. If they were not financially unsound, if they continued to bring in more than the revenue they were calculated to bring in, then it was wrong from a financial point of view to modify or remove them so long as revenue was required, or any more objectionable mode of taxation existed, which was certainly the case at present. He was of opinion that sufficient reason had not been given for believing that these duties were financially unsound from this point of view; and it was assuredly the case that Government was not in the position of having more money than it knew what to do with; and therefore it seemed to him impossible for the Government to pledge itself to any course of action in respect to customs-duties.

His hon'ble friend had said that it was seldom wise for Government to go out of its way to pledge itself to measures which it intended to adopt hereafter, and which might turn out after all to be impracticable. In this he thought they would all agree with him, and he firmly believed that this principle had never been more applicable and cogent than in the case of these duties. Though he differed from his hon'ble friend on this point, he could quite understand that he had been carried away into saying things which on fuller reflection he would have left unsaid. This theory of what he dared say he called absolutely free trade, had long been the prevailing idea of his hon'ble friend's mind. He had long been its supporter in India, and he spoke, he knew from honest conviction, and he had no doubt that he was quite unable to understand how anyone of ordinary intelligence could fail to agree with him. But as a matter of fact, he would find that very few did agree with him; and if he found himself in advance of the age, he must be content to adapt his speed to that of the people whom he had to convince, and to satisfy them that he was working for their good.

He had not ventured on these remarks in any hostile spirit, or desire to raise opposition. No doubt the remarks of his hon'ble friend on Thursday had had the effect of creating considerable alarm until they had been explained away by his remarks of to-day. His hon'ble friend had stated last week his belief that an honest Government obtained great advantage from a full examination and discussion of its proposed measures, and the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR only hoped that the result of this discussion would be to make him reflect very seriously before he attempted to carry his theories into effect. He was glad to have heard from him to-day his repudiation of any desire to sacrifice India's interests to those of any other country, and he was sure that they might feel that the Government of India looked upon the interests of the people of India as its first duty, and that no one really took that view more strongly than his hon'ble friend, whatever he might say in advocating a favourite theory.

The Hon'ble SIR JOHN STRACHEY said—"My Lord: In discussing a subject of so much difficulty and complexity as that of our Indian finances, there must, necessarily, be many differences of opinion in matters of detail; but, speaking generally, I think I may congratulate the Government and myself on finding that the principles which I have endeavoured to explain to the Council as those by which our financial policy ought to be governed, have met with so much approval.

"There is, I think, only one point on which I need now take up the time of the Council. This is a point which was specially noticed by my hon'ble friends Mr. Bullen-Smith and Mr. Cowie, the former of whom, I regret to think, will not much longer take part in our deliberations. If anything could have added to that regret, it would have been the speech which we have heard from him today. Whether he agrees with us or not I always feel that the Government is fortunate in having as its critic a man of such conspicuous ability and unfailing courtesy, and I feel that we are especially fortunate when, as he has done today, he tells us that he generally approves the principles of our policy.

"No one is more conscious than I am of the weak points in my own Statement, and I have no wish to conceal or deny them. I agree with my hon'ble friends, Mr. Bullen Smith and Mr. Cowie, that one of those weak points is the indefinite character of the announcements which I made on behalf of the Government about the loan operations of the year, and the bills upon the Government of India which will be sold in London; but it is a weak point for which neither this Government nor the Secretary of State is responsible, but which arises from the peculiar circumstances of the case.

"The first great cause of this indefiniteness is the condition that the assent of Parliament must be had before any money can be borrowed in England on behalf of India. Whenever the Secretary of State has no statutory powers of borrowing unused, and this is his present position, it is impossible for him to assume that Parliament will see fit to grant any additional powers for which he may ask, still less can he proclaim to the world beforehand his assumption that Parliament will sanction arrangements which it has not discussed, or even heard of, and which he and the Government of India have settled as if they were an independent power. The English Parliament, wisely jealous of its own authority, is not a body that can be so treated.

"Moreover, the question of borrowing money in England is by no means a question important only to our Indian finances; it is also a political question of the highest moment affecting Imperial interests over which it is the special duty of Parliament to watch.

"Even if this difficulty did not exist, it would be hardly possible, under present circumstances, to pledge the Secretary of State to sell any specified quantity of bills at specified times. Fluctuations in the price of silver might be so serious and might occur so rapidly that it might be in the highest degree inconvenient to carry out the pledges which had been given. It is so impossible to foresee even the near future that, as the Council will have observed, in speaking even of the sales of bills during the next two months, I could do no more than announce the present intentions of the Secretary of State. Even during the last few days we have had strong illustrations of the serious disturbances to which the rates of exchange are now liable. If we were to attempt to foresee the course of these disturbances, and were to make a definite programme to be adhered to under all circumstances, on the assumption that our forecast would turn out correct, I fear that it might turn out that we had given the strongest possible proof of our own incompetency.

"All that I can say is, that my announcements were made after communication with the Secretary of State, and that I cannot doubt that Her Majesty's Government will give great weight to those announcements made on behalf of the Government of India. I will add that it is the desire of the Government of India to conceal none of the demands which it has to make upon the money-market. We know the magnitude of the interests affected by our operations, and recognise our duty to give the earliest and most complete information regarding them; and we entertain no doubt that a policy of perfect frankness is required in the interests as much of the State, as of the influential classes whose business operations must be affected by our transactions.

"It is the object of the Government, first, to borrow altogether as little as possible;—secondly, when it must borrow, to obtain as much as possible in India, so as to avoid incurring obligations defined by a gold standard. There may be differences of opinion as to how this object may be most effectually attained, and as to the extent of the sacrifices to which it may be expedient for the State to submit in order that its obligations may be measured by its own standard of value.

"I desire to say, further, that the Government of India is quite alive to the fact that the interests of the State in this matter are identical with those of its creditors, and that, whatever may be our measures for the supply of the treasury during the year, the interests of the proprietors of our existing securities will be carefully considered."

His Excellency THE PRESIDENT said:—"There can, I think, be no doubt that not only the various views and opinions to which we have listened in the course of this afternoon, but also the freedom and ability with which they have been expressed, will give great value to the record of our proceedings; and I certainly share most strongly the opinion expressed by my hon'ble friend, Sir John Strachey, that we are all of us specially indebted to our hon'ble friend, Mr. Bullen-Smith, for the excellent speech to which I for one listened, I may say, with the liveliest admiration. But the attention of hon'ble members has now been occupied for almost five hours, and patience has its limits. At any rate I am not so inhuman as to trespass further at this late hour upon the patience of the Council, which is probably well nigh exhausted; what little I have to say on the general subject of our financial policy, and more particularly with reference to the financial measures that have been placed before this Council, I propose to reserve till our meeting next Wednesday, when I trust it will be in our power to pass those measures into law. But perhaps I ought not to omit altogether the opportunity now offered me to corroborate, on behalf of the Government of India, the explanatory statement made to-day by my hon'ble friend the Member in charge of the Financial Department of this Government.

"That statement was made in reference to the impression brought to our notice by my hon'ble friend, Mr. Colvin, in introducing the Bills which will to-day be referred to a Select Committee. Rumours of such an impression had already reached our ears; which were thus enabled to detect the echo of them in the observations of my hon'ble friend, the Mahárájá Narendra Krishna. But those echoes, though not faintly repeated, died away at last, and I hope for ever, in the speech of my hon'ble friend the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

"So far as I understand the character of that impression, it is this, that the Government of India desires or intends—if it be not indeed in a covert conspiracy—to tax the people of Bengal, of Oudh and the North-Western Provinces, in order to enable us to purge our customs-tariff, by removing from it the cotton-duties; nay, more, to render the whole tariff 'fine by degrees, and beautifully less,' till we get rid of it altogether.

"I think then, that I ought to repeat to the Council, with whatever authority my voice can give to it, the assurance already given by my hon'ble friend, Sir John Strachey, that we neither desire, nor intend, nor have we ever desired or intended, anything of the kind. What we do desire and intend is embodied in the two very simple bills introduced by my hon'ble friend Mr. Colvin; and it amounts to no more than this: we desire to give the earliest possible practical effect, an effect which shall operate as widely as it is at present in our power to extend its operation, to the principle that Local Governments shall be responsible, financially, for the maintenance and management of works which are of special local utility.

"Now between this principle and any part of the Customs-tariff there is no connection whatever that I am able to recognise. I do not wish to make at the present moment any observations on the cotton-duties, further than this, that if the present import-duties on cotton-goods were not five, but fifty per cent.; if the whole of our sea-customs revenue amounted to many more millions than it amounts to now, the principle to which I have referred would still, in our sincere belief, be an equally salutary principle, and its application would be equally necessary to place our finances in a sounder and better position than they now hold.

"It is undoubtedly true that the Secretary of State has intimated to us in the Despatch which was quoted by my hon'ble friend, Sir John Strachey, that however urgent might be the purgation of our tariff by the removal or gradual reduction of those duties, still, in his opinion, such a measure ought not to be contemplated by means of increased direct taxation for the purpose of effecting it. But before the Secretary of State had expressed that opinion, it had been expressed by the Government of India itself, and the Government of India which then expressed that opinion still holds it and still desires to act on it.

"There is I think no occasion for me to make any further observations on that particular subject at the present moment, and I will therefore now merely put to the Council the motion which is before it."

The Motion was put and agreed to.

NORTH WESTERN PROVINCES LICENSE BILL.

The Hon'ble MR. COLVIN, also moved that the Bill for the licensing of certain trades and dealings in the North-Western Provinces be referred to a Select Committee.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

MILITARY LUNATICS BILL.

Major General the Hon'ble SIR E. B. JHONSON moved that the Bill to facilitate the admission of Military Lunatics into Asylums, be published in the Gazette of India in English, and in the Local Gazettes in English and in such other languages as the Local Government directs.

The Motion was put and agreed to.

The following Select Committees were named:—

On the Bill to amend the law relating to assignments from the General Provincial Fund established under the North-Western Provinces Local Rates Act, 1871—The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Hobhouse, the Hon'ble Sir J. Strachey and the Hon'ble Messrs. Cowie, Bullen-Smith and Cockerell and the Mover.

On the Bill for the licensing of certain trades and dealings in the North-Western Provinces—The Hon'ble Sir Arthur Hobhouse, the Hon'ble Sir J. Strachey and the Hon'ble Messrs. Cowie, Bullen Smith and Cockerell and the Mover.

The Council adjourned to Wednesday, the 28th March 1877.

REPORTS ON THE STATE OF THE SEASON AND PROSPECTS OF THE CROPS FOR THE WEEK ENDING THE 29th MARCH 1877.

GENERAL REMARKS.—In Madras during the week three inches of rain fell in Madura, and about half an inch in Kistna, North Arcot, and Salem; slight rain is also reported from Coimbatore and Tinnevelly. No rain fell in any of the other districts. There is no improvement in general prospects. The number of relief labourers amounted to 663,266, being rather more than five thousand in excess of the numbers employed on relief works during the preceding week. The numbers fell off in Kurnool, Bellary, and Nellore, but increased in Cuddapah, North Arcot, Salem, and Madura. In Bellary the decrease is reported at nearly 21,000, and is assigned to cholera, to the return of people to their villages for the festival of the new year, and to the stoppage of some works. Upwards of 99,000 people were gratuitously fed by the State during the week. In Mysore showers of rain have fallen at Bangalore and in Coorg. About 70,000 persons were employed on relief works, and 46,861 gratuitously fed. There has been no rain in Bombay, and there is no change in the condition of the distressed districts. From the Central Provinces a little rain is reported in five districts, Chhindwara, Jubbulpore, Seoni, Mandla, and Wardha. The rabi crops have been generally reaped with a good outturn, and are being threshed. Prospects are good. In Central India also crops are excellent, though damaged by hail in some places. In Rajputana prospects are generally very good, except in Ulwar, where much damage has been done by hail. In the Punjab the prospects of the harvest are good generally. In Peshawur, where alone was there any rain in the week, the crops have been damaged by hail. No rain has fallen in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, except a little at Agra: prospects appear generally favourable. In Bengal slight rain has fallen in some districts. The rabi crops are being harvested with a good outturn, and spring sowings are being made under favourable conditions. Reports are good from Burma.

GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE, AGRICULTURE, AND COMMERCE.

TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY OF STATE REGARDING FAMINE IN WESTERN AND SOUTHERN INDIA.

Dated 30th March 1877.

From—Calcutta,	To—London,
From—Viceroy in Council.	To—Secretary of State for India.

No despatch this week owing to press of Legislative business. Temple has spent ten days in Bombay, Deccan, and telegraphs thus :—

"Have visited parts of Sholapur, Kaládgi, Ahmednagar and Poona districts with local officers. Have inspected 35,000 relief labourers, person by person, and 6,000 children, besides 4,000 villagers not on relief. In these districts the labourers are doing well on present rate of wage; care is taken to restrict relief to the really necessitous; charitable relief organisation good for most part, but village inspection needs completeness, especially Kaládgi. Cannot hear of any present case of starvation in these districts. Of those persons who in beginning emigrated to territories, some are returning, but many are still absent. More than three quarters of total relief labourers are on large works under Engineers, who exact full task-work, and enforce excellent discipline. Projects are really good and useful. Supply of grain ample; prices moderate. Officers do not expect, but are quite prepared, to deal with great or sudden increase of number. Land revenue remission half my previous estimate. Some signs of reviving hope among people. District authorities, under directions of local Government, have been firm and steady in resisting clamour and agitation." Message ends.

He has now returned to the Madras Presidency, and telegraphs thus from Gooty :—

"Dr. Townsend, Sanitary Commissioner to Government of India, is with me. He thinks well of physical condition of many thousands relief labourers on reduced wages inspected in districts of Sholapur and Bellary. When in telegram of 15th March I said relief works, Madras Presidency, well controlled, I referred to test of admission and restriction of numbers; but respecting task-work control still defective, and compares unfavourably with Bombay. Cause is that in Bombay relief works chiefly under Engineering Department, but in Madras chiefly under Civil Officers. Professional agency exists in Madras districts and helps the Civil Officers, but is not adequately employed in exacting task-work. Efforts made to collect relief labourers for East Coast Canal and for Railway from Bellary towards Dharwar. Numbers continue decreasing slightly on works, but increasing on charitable relief, which is right. Village inspection and relief decidedly improving, though far from perfect. Prices stationary. Import traffic slightly diminished. Showers which have fallen do not effect material good, but inspire hope and quiet public mind." Message ends.

We have sanctioned commencement of earthwork of Conjeveram and Chingleput Railway as a relief work on same terms as Bellary-Hubli line, if Madras Government think necessary. In Madras Presidency increase of twenty-three thousand charitably relieved and of seven thousand on works. In Bombay Presidency no increase in total relieved, only slight variations in details. In Mysore further increase of eleven thousand seven hundred, chiefly in charitably relieved.

A. M. MONTEATH,
Director Genl. of the Post Office of India.

The 12th March 1877.

Some difficulty has been experienced in making known to the public in Great Britain the conditions under which overland parcels can be sent out to India, and it is thought that the following notice respecting the conditions may be useful to persons in India who may have occasion to order parcels to be sent to them from Great Britain.

2. Particular attention is drawn to the N. B. at the foot of the Notice, which contains the first notice of an important reduction in the rate of charge for parcels containing books.

PARCEL POST FROM GREAT BRITAIN TO INDIA.

1. Persons wishing to send parcels to any part of British India, can do so through the Indian Parcel Post Agency—established under authority of the Director General of the Post Office of India—at 122, Leadenhall Street, E. C., and (Branch Offices) at 25, Cockspur Street, S. W.

2. The charge for parcels is 1s. per lb. or fraction of a lb. (prepayment optional), covering transit from London to destination in India. Insurance may be effected, if desired, at the rate (to be prepaid) of 1s. up to 3l. value, 2s. 6d. up to 10l. value, and 5s. up to 20l. value. Indian Customs duty (if chargeable) will be realized from the addressee.

3. The maximum weight, size, and value of a parcel are—weight 50 lbs., size 2 feet long by 1 foot broad and 1 foot deep, value 20l.

4. The following are forbidden contents:—Jewellery, watches, precious stones, liquids, or articles of a dangerous or damaging nature.

5. Mode of packing and address:—Parcels must be entirely closed and securely packed and fastened; a covering of cloth or water-proof sewn at the edges being recommended. The Indian address should be legibly written, with the superscription, "By Indian Parcel Post."

6. A letter of advice, stating name and address on parcel, contents and value for Custom House clearance, with legible signature and address of sender, should be sent to the Office (see clause 1), with each parcel, accompanied by payment, if it be desired to prepay or insure the parcel.

7. A receipt will be given (by the Company) for each parcel received from the country, and for other parcels, if required.

8. Parcels from the country (including all those not booked by the sender or their messengers or agents in person at the London Offices) may be forwarded to the Office in London (see address below) by railway, or any other means available; but the parcel with the Indian address, as in clause 5, should in such case be enclosed in an outer covering, bearing the address, "Indian Parcel Post Agency, 122, Leadenhall Street, London, E. C." The charges for carriage to the above address are additional to charges for transit or insurance under clause 2, and may be prepaid to the local carrying agent, or left to be paid on delivery in London, and subsequently collected from the addressee. The letter of advice (see clause 6), with any payment desired for transit or insurance (payment by post should be by cheque or money order, payable to A. M. Bethune), should be sent to the same address by letter post, and the receipt will in such case be forwarded by post.

N.B.—(With effect from 1st May 1877) Parcels containing books (or articles treated as books under the British Inland Book Post rules) will be charged at half the rates viz., 6*d.* per pound.

WHEREAS it is expedient to regulate emigration under engagements to labour from the Presidency of Fort Saint George to the Straits Settlements; It is hereby enacted as follows :—

Preamble.

I.—PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

I. This Act may be called "The Straits Settlements Emigration Act, 1877:"

Local extent.

It extends only to the territories under the government of the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council;

Commencement.

And it shall come into force on such date as the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, may, by notification in the Fort St. George Gazette direct.

Interpretation-clause.

2. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

"Emigrate." "Emigrate" denotes the departure of any Native of India out of the said territories, under an engagement to labour in the said Settlements :

"Emigrant." "Emigrant" means a person who "emigrates" within the meaning of the above definition

"Magistrate." "Magistrate" means a Magistrate of a District, a Magistrate of a division of a district, or any other person appointed by the Governor of Fort St. George in Council to perform the functions of a Magistrate under this Act :

"Vessel." "Vessel" includes anything made for the conveyance by water of human beings or property.

From what port emigration lawful.

3. It shall not be lawful to emigrate except from such ports as may from time to time be declared by the Governor of Fort St. George in Council, by a notification in the Fort Saint George Gazette, to be ports from which emigration under this Act shall be lawful.

The Local Government may, at any time, by a like notification, revoke any such notification.

II.—EMIGRATION AGENTS.

Appointment of Emigration Agents.

4. The Government of the Straits Settlements may, from time to time, appoint such persons as the Governor of Fort St. George in Council approves, to act as Emigration Agents at such ports as aforesaid.

Any Emigration Agent so appointed may be suspended or removed by the Government of the Straits Settlements.

III.—PROTECTORS OF EMIGRANTS.

Appointment of Protector of Emigrants.

5. The Governor of Fort St. George in Council shall direct such persons as he thinks fit to act as Protectors of Emigrants under this Act at such ports and for such local areas as may be assigned to them respectively, and may, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, assign to such persons such establishment as the Governor of Fort St. George in Council thinks fit.

General duties of Protector.

6. Every Protector of Emigrants, in addition to any special duties assigned to him by this Act, shall, so far as is in his power, protect and aid all emigrants with his advice or otherwise, and cause all the provisions of this Act to be duly complied with.

Inspection of vessels with return emigrants.

He may also inspect on arrival all vessels bringing return emigrants to the port at which he is Protector, and inquire into the treatment received by such emigrants both during the period of their service in the Straits Settlements and also during the voyage, and shall make a report thereon to the Governor of Fort St. George in Council.

Such Protector shall also aid and advise such return emigrants, so far as he reasonably can, when called upon by them to do so.

IV.—Emigration Depôt.

Establishment and licensing of depôt.

7. Every Emigration Agent shall establish a suitable depôt for emigrants at the port at which he is Agent. Such depôt may be licensed by the local Protector of Emigrants after being inspected and approved of by him.

Fee for license.

For every such license the Emigration Agent shall pay to the Protector of Emigrants a fee of fifteen rupees.

Inspection by Protector.

8. The Protector of Emigrants may, at any time, examine into the state of the depôt and the manner in which the emigrants are therein lodged, fed, clothed and otherwise provided for and attended to, and shall do so at least once a year.

And he may at any time cancel the license, if he considers that the depôt for which it was granted is unhealthy, or has in any respect become unsuitable for the purpose for which it was established, or if the local Emigration Agent fails to comply with any of the requirements of this Act.

Agent and his subordinates to afford facilities for inspection.

The Emigration Agent and all persons in charge of, or employed in, the depôt, shall give the Protector every facility for making such inspections as he may deem necessary or proper, and shall afford him all such information respecting the depôt and the emigrants as he may require.

Supply of medical aid and comforts.

9. The Emigration Agent shall provide at the depôt such medical aid and comforts as the Protector may from time to time direct.

V.—Recruiters of Labourers.

Protector to license recruiters.

10. Each Protector of Emigrants shall license many fit persons as he deems necessary, to be recruiters of labourers for the Straits Settlements; and no person shall engage or attempt to engage any Native of India to emigrate, or shall otherwise act or be employed as a recruiter of labourers, except under a license from a Protector of Emigrants.

Duration and cancelment of license.

11. No such license shall be in force for a longer period than one year; and in case of misconduct on the part of any recruiter, the Protector of Emigrants who granted it may cancel his license before the expiration of the period for which it was granted.

Form of license.

12. Every such license shall specify the local limits within which the person licensed may recruit labourers, and shall be in the form set forth in the first schedule hereto annexed.

Fee for license.

For every such license the recruiter shall pay to the Protector a fee of five rupees.

Recruiter to obtain Magistrate's countersignature to license.

13. No recruiter shall engage, or attempt to engage, labourers in any district without having first exhibited his license to a Magistrate in such district, and obtained the countersignature of such Magistrate thereupon.

No Magistrate shall countersign a recruiter's license unless and until he has satisfied himself, by such enquiry as he thinks fit, that the licensee is not by character or from any other cause unfitted to be a recruiter under this Act.

If any Magistrate who has countersigned a license afterwards finds reason to think that the licensee is by character or other cause unfitted to be a recruiter under this Act, he may require the licensee to produce the license and may cancel his signature; or he may, if he thinks fit, impound the license and send it to the Emigration Agent for cancellation.

Every Magistrate refusing to countersign a recruiter's license or cancelling his signature as aforesaid, shall, without delay, report his refusal or cancellation and the grounds of it to the Protector of Emigrants who has authority to cancel the recruiter's license.

VI.—Contracts with Emigrants.

Conditions of validity of emigration contracts.

14. No contract made by a recruiter with a Native of India to emigrate shall be enforceable by the recruiter or his principal unless it—

(a) is expressed in writing;

(b) is executed by the recruiter on behalf of some principal in the Straits Settlements;

(c) states the terms, if any, agreed on as to the redemption of the recruit's engagement for employment, or of the unexpired term of such engagement;

(d) the term of the recruit's employment, the nature of the services to be performed by him, and the rate of wages to be paid in respect of the same are registered in the manner provided in section eighteen.

But nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to prevent such Native from insisting, if he thinks fit, that such contract shall be performed.

Contents of such contracts.

15. Every such contract shall—

(a) contain an engagement for employment to be provided by such principal for a definite term not exceeding three years; and

(b) specify the nature of the services to be performed by such recruit and the rates of wages (not less than twelve cents a day for an able-bodied male adult) payable in respect of the same.

Certain agreements declared void.

16. Save as provided by section fourteen, clause (c), every agreement entered into by a Native of India in the territories subject to the Governor of Fort Saint George in Council, to pay money to any person in the Straits Settlements, in consideration of pecuniary or other assistance given to such Native to emigrate, shall be illegal and void.

Every contract not containing the particulars required by section fifteen shall be illegal and void.

Medical examination of intending emigrants.

17. Every recruit who has entered into such a contract as aforesaid shall be brought by the recruiter before the Civil Surgeon of the district or such other medical officer as the Local Government appoints in this behalf or, in default of such appointment, before such medical officer as the Magistrate directs.

The medical officer shall thereupon examine the recruit, and shall either reject him or shall certify that he is in a fit state of health and able in point of physical condition to proceed to the Straits Settlements and to work there.

Dependents.

If it is intended that any persons shall accompany the recruit as his dependents, the recruiter shall also bring them before the medical officer for the purpose of obtaining certificates that they are in a fit state of health and able in point of physical condition to perform the journey to the Straits Settlements; and the medical officer shall examine such persons and shall give or refuse certificates according to his opinion as to their fitness and ability.

Form of certificates.

Certificates shall be in the form set forth in the second schedule hereto annexed; and the recruiter shall pay to the medical officer such fee for each person so examined as the Local Government may from time to time prescribe.

Emigrant to appear before Magistrate, and be examined.

18. Every certified recruit and every accompanying dependent shall appear with the recruiter before a Magistrate in the district within which the contract with the recruit was entered into.

The Magistrate shall thereupon inspect the instrument of contract and the medical certificate of the recruit, and shall, apart from the recruiter, examine the recruit with reference to his contract.

If it appears on such examination that the recruit understands the nature of the contract he has entered into, and that he is willing to fulfil the same, the Magistrate shall register

(a) the name, the father's name and the age of such recruit:

(b) the name of the village or place in which he resides:

(c) the port of embarkation to which it is intended he shall proceed:

(d) the name of his employer:

(e) the term of his employment, the nature of the services to be performed by him and the rate of wages to be paid in respect of the same.

The recruit shall thereupon be deemed an emigrant under this Act.

Registration when to be refused.

If the Magistrate thinks that the recruit does not understand the nature of the contract into which he has entered, or has been induced to enter into it by fraud or misrepresentation, or finds that the contract is not in accordance with section fifteen, he shall refuse to register the particulars specified as aforesaid, and record his reasons for such refusal.

Examination of dependents.

19. On the appearance of any person claiming to be dependent on an emigrant, the Magistrate, after inspecting the medical certificate, shall, apart from the recruiter, examine such person if able to give intelligent answers to questions as to his dependence upon the emigrant whom he is about to accompany, and as to his willingness to accompany such emigrant.

If the Magistrate is satisfied that such dependence and willingness exist, he shall register the dependent as a dependent on such emigrant.

But if the Magistrate sees reason to doubt the existence of such dependence or willingness, he may refuse to register the alleged dependent, and, if so, shall record his reasons for such refusal.

Copies of registered matters.

20. The Magistrate shall furnish to every emigrant an authenticated copy on substantial paper of the matters registered under sections 18 and 19.

Copy of entry in register to be sent to Emigration Agent and Protector.

21. A copy of every entry made in the registry book by a Magistrate, shall be forthwith forwarded by such Magistrate to the Emigration Agent and to the Protector of Emigrants.

Registration.

22. The registration required by sections 18 and 19 shall, in the case of emigrants recruited in any local area for which a Protector of Emigrants has been appointed, be effected before him instead of a Magistrate; and such Protector shall furnish to the emigrant one copy of the matters so registered, and another copy of the same matters to the Emigration Agent.

Fee for registration.

23. For the registration of every recruit under section 18, the recruiter shall pay to the Magistrate or to the Protector of Emigrants, as the case may be, such fee not exceeding one rupee, as may be from time to time directed by the Local Government.

VII.—ARRIVAL AT DEPÔT AND PROCEDURE THEREON.

Arrival at depôt to be reported.

Duty of Emigration Agent on arrival of emigrants.

25. The Protector of Emigrants shall, within forty-eight hours after the arrival at the depôt of each emigrant not registered by himself, question such emigrant as to the mode in which he has been treated on his journey to the depôt, and shall at the same time examine the emigrant's contract and the copy of the register furnished to him under section 20.

If, for any reason, further enquiry is necessary, he shall make such enquiry forthwith.

Every sum so paid shall be recoverable by the Protector, with six per cent. per annum interest from the date of payment, from the Emigration Agent, or from such recruiter.

32. Whenever the Emigration Agent refuses, without the consent of the Protector, to countersign an emigrant's copy of the register as required by section 26, or is chargeable with a breach of any duty which any contract with an emigrant expressly or by implication imposes upon him, the Protector may, if he thinks fit, institute a suit on behalf of the emigrant against the Emigration Agent for the recovery of damages for the breach of such contract.

CHAPTER I.

OF THE JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA.

No person exempt from jurisdiction by reason of descent or place of birth.

10. No person shall, by reason of his descent or place of birth, be in any civil proceeding exempted from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts.

Courts to try all civil suits unless specially barred.

11. The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is barred by any enactment for the time being in force.

Explanation.—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.

Pending suits.

12. Except where a suit has been stayed under section 20, the Court shall not try any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit for the same relief between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, pending in the same or any other Court, whether superior or inferior, in British India having jurisdiction to grant such relief, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before Her Majesty in Council.

Explanation.—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action.

Res judicata.

13. No Court shall try any suit or issue, in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has been heard and finally decided by a Court of competent jurisdiction, in a former suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title.

Explanation I.—The matter above referred to must in the former suit have been alleged by one party and either denied or confessed, expressly or impliedly, by the other.

Explanation II.—Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit.

Explanation III.—Any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to have been refused.

Explanation IV.—A decision is final within the meaning of this section when it is such as the Court making it could not alter (except on review) on the application of either party or reconsider of its own motion. A decision liable to appeal may be final within the meaning of this section until the appeal is made.

Explanation V.—Where persons litigate bonâ fide in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating.

Explanation VI.—Where a foreign judgment is relied on, the production of the judgment duly authenticated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appear on the record; but such presumption may be removed by proving the want of jurisdiction.

When foreign judgment no bar to suit in British India.

20. If a suit which may be instituted in more than one Court is instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant or all the defendants does not or do not actually and voluntarily reside, or carry on business, or personally work for gain, the defendant or any defendant may, after giving notice in writing to the other parties of his intention to apply to the Court to stay proceedings, apply to the Court accordingly; and if the Court, after hearing such of the parties as desire to be heard, is satisfied that justice is more likely to be done by the suit being instituted in some other Court, it may stay proceedings either finally or till further order, and make such order as it thinks fit as to the costs already incurred by the parties or any of them.

In such case, if the plaintiff so requires, the Court shall return the plaint with an endorsement thereon of the order staying proceedings.

Application when to be made.

Every such application shall be made at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases before the issues are settled; and any defendant not so applying shall be deemed to have acquiesced in the institution of the suit.

21. Where the Court, under section 20, stays proceedings, and the plaintiff re-institutes his suit in another Court, the plaint shall not be chargeable with any court-fee; provided that the proper fee has been levied on the institution of the suit in the former Court, and that the plaint has been returned by such Court.

27. Where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, or where it is doubtful whether it has been instituted in the name of the right plaintiff, the Court may, if satisfied that the suit has been so commenced through a bonâ fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the real matter in dispute so to do, order any other person or persons to be substituted or added as plaintiff or plaintiffs upon such terms as the Court thinks just.

30. Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one suit, one or more of such parties may, with the permission of the Court, sue or be sued, or may defend in such suit, on behalf of all parties so interested. But the Court shall in such case give, at the plaintiff's expense, notice of the institution of the suit to all such parties either by personal service or (if from the number of parties or any other cause such service is not reasonably practicable), then by public advertisement, as the Court in each case may direct.

Suit not to fail by reason of misjoinder.

31. No suit shall be defeated by reason of the misjoinder of parties, and the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to enable plaintiffs to join in respect of distinct causes of action.

32. The Court may, on or before the first hearing, upon the application of either party, and on such terms as the Court thinks just, order that the name of any party, whether as plaintiff or as defendant, improperly joined, be struck out; and the Court may at any time, either upon or without such application, and on such terms as the Court thinks just, order that any plaintiff be made a defendant or that any defendant be made a plaintiff, and that the name of any person who ought to have been joined whether as plaintiff or defendant or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the suit, be adde'

34. All objections for want of parties, or for joinder of parties who have no interest in the suit, or for misjoinder as co-plaintiffs or co-defendants, shall be taken at the earliest possible opportunity, and in all cases before the first hearing; and any such objection not so taken shall be deemed to have been waived by the defendant.

Time for taking objections as to non-joinder or misjoinder of parties.

35. When there are more plaintiffs than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any proceeding under this Code: and in like manner when there are more defendants than one, any one or more of them may be authorized by any other of them to appear, plead or act for such other in any such proceeding.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE FRAME OF THE SUIT.

Suit how to be framed.

42. Every suit shall, as far as practicable, be so framed as to afford ground for a final decision upon the subjects in dispute, and so to prevent further litigation concerning them.

Suit to include the whole claim.

43. Every suit shall include the whole of the claim arising out of the cause of action; but a plaintiff may relinquish any portion of his claim in order to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of any Court.

A person entitled to more than one remedy in respect of the same claim may sue for all or any of his remedies; but if he omits (except with the leave of the Court obtained before the first hearing) to sue for any of such remedies, he shall not afterwards sue for the remedy so omitted.

Illustration.

A lets a house to B at a yearly rent of Rs. 1,200. The rent for the whole of the years 1874 and 1875 is due and unpaid. A sues B only for the rent due for 1875. A shall not afterwards sue B for the rent due for 1876.

Only certain claims to be joined with suit for recovery of land.

44. Rule a.—No cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property, or to obtain a declaration of title to immoveable property, except—

(a) claims in respect of mesne profits or arrears of rent in respect of the property claimed,

(b) damages for breach of any contract under which the property or any part thereof are or is held, and

Plaintiff may join several causes of action.

45. Subject to the rules contained in section 44, the plaintiff may unite in the same suit several causes of action, and any plaintiffs having causes of action against the same defendant or defendants, may unite such causes of action in the same suit.

Court may order separation.

But if it appear to the Court that any such causes of action cannot be conveniently tried or disposed of together, the Court may, at any time before the first hearing, of its own motion or on the application of the defendant, order separate trials of any such causes of action to be had, or make such other order as may be necessary or expedient for the separate disposal thereof.

When causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the suit, whether or not an order has been made under the second paragraph of this section.

Defendant may apply to confine suit.

46. Any defendant alleging that the plaintiff has united in the same suit several causes of action which cannot be conveniently disposed of in one suit may at any time before the first hearing, or, where issues are settled, before any evidence is recorded, apply to the Court for an order confining the suit to such of the causes of action as may be conveniently disposed of in one suit.

Court on hearing application may exclude some causes and order amendment.

47. If, on the hearing of such application, it appears to the Court that the causes of action are such as cannot all be conveniently disposed of in one suit, the Court may order any of such causes of action to be excluded, and may direct the plaint to be amended accordingly, and may make such order as to costs as may be just.

Every amendment made under this section shall be attested by the signature of the Judge.

CHAPTER V.

OF THE INSTITUTION OF SUITS.

Suits to be commenced by plaint.

48. Every suit shall be instituted by presenting a plaint to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

Language of plaint.

49. The plaint must be distinctly written in the language of the Court; provided that if such language is not English, the plaint may (with the permission of the Court) be written in English; but in such case, if the defendant so require, a translation of the plaint into the language of the Court shall be filed in court.

Particulars to be contained in plaint.

50. The plaint must contain the following particulars

(a) the name of the Court in which the suit is brought;

(b) the name, description and place of abode of the plaintiff;

(c) the name, description and place of abode of the defendant, so far as they can be ascertained:

(d) a plain and concise statement of the circumstances constituting the cause of action, and where and when it arose;

(e) a demand of the relief which the plaintiff claims; and

(f) if the plaintiff has allowed a set-off or relinquished a portion of his claim, the amount so allowed or relinquished.

In money-suits.

If the plaintiff seek the recovery of money, the plaint must state the precise amount, so far as the case admits.

In a suit for mesne profits: and in a suit for the amount which will be found due to the plaintiff on taking unsettled accounts between him and the defendant the plaint need only state approximately the amount sued for.

Where plaintiff sues as a representative.

When the plaintiff sues in a representative character, the plaint should shew, not only that he has an actual existing interest in the subject-matter, but that he has taken the steps necessary to enable him to institute a suit concerning it.

Illustrations.

(a) A sues as B's executor. The plaint must state that A has proved B's will.

(b) A sues as C's administrator. The plaint must state that A has taken out administration to C's estate.

(c) A sues as guardian of D, a Muhammadan minor. A is not D's guardian according to Muhammadan law and usage. The plaint must state that A has been specially appointed D's guardian.

Defendant's interest and liability to be shewn.

The plaint must shew that the defendant is or claims to be interested in the subject-matter, and that he is liable to be called upon to answer the plaintiff's demand.

Illustration.

A dies leaving B his executor, C his legatee, and D a debtor to A's estate. C sues D to compel him to pay his debt in satisfaction of C's legacy. The plaint must shew that B has causelessly refused to sue D, or that B and D have colluded for the purpose of defrauding C, or other such circumstances rendering D liable to C.

Grounds of exemption from limitation law.

If the cause of action arose beyond the period ordinarily allowed by any law for instituting the suit, the plaint must shew the ground upon which exemption from such law is claimed.

Plaint to be subscribed and verified.

51. The plaint shall be subscribed by the plaintiff and his pleader (if any), and shall be verified at the foot by the plaintiff or, with the permission of the Court, by some other person proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be acquainted with the facts of the case.

Contents of verification.

52. The verification must be to the effect that the same is true to the knowledge of the person making it, except as to matters stated on information and belief, and that as to those matters he believes it to be true.

Verification to be signed and attested.

The verification shall be signed by the person making it, and when he makes it out of court he shall sign it in the presence of a witness, who shall also sign it.

The Court shall examine such witness as to the fact of the signature, unless the person making the verification is present.

When the plaint may be rejected, returned for amendment, or amended.

53. The plaint may, at the discretion of the Court, and at or before the first hearing, be rejected, returned for amendment within a time to be fixed by the Court, or amended then and there, upon such terms as to the payment of costs occasioned by the amendment as the Court thinks fit,

(a) if it do not state correctly and without prolixity the several particulars hereinbefore required to be specified therein; or

(b) if it contain any particulars other than those so required; or

(c) if it be not subscribed and verified as hereinbefore required; or

(d) if it do not disclose a cause of action; or

(e) if it is not framed in accordance with section 42; or

(f) if it is wrongly framed by reason of non-joinder or misjoinder of parties, or because the plaintiff has joined causes of action which ought not to be joined in the same suit:

Proviso.

Provided that a plaint cannot be altered so as to convert a suit of one character into a suit of another and inconsistent character.

Attestation of amendment.

When a plaint is amended, the amendment shall be attested by the signature of the Judge.

When the plaint shall be rejected.

54. The plaint shall be rejected in the following cases:—

(a) if the relief sought is undervalued, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to correct the valuation within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so:

(b) if the relief sought is properly valued, but the plaint is written upon paper insufficiently stamped, and the plaintiff, on being required by the Court to supply the requisite stamp-paper within a time to be fixed by the Court, fails to do so:

(c) if the suit appear from the statement in the plaint to be barred by any positive rule of law:

(d) if the plaint having been returned for amendment within a time fixed by the Court is not amended within such time.

Procedure on rejecting a plaint.

55. When a plaint is rejected, the Judge shall record with his own hand an order to that effect with the reason for such order.

56. The rejection of the plaint on any of the grounds hereinbefore mentioned shall not of its own force preclude the plaintiff from presenting a fresh plaint in respect of the same cause of action.

When rejection of plaint does not preclude presentation of fresh plaint.

57. The plaint shall be returned to be presented to the proper Court in the following cases:

When the plaint shall be returned to be presented to the proper Court.

(a) If a suit has been instituted in a Court whose grade is lower or higher than that of the Court competent to try it, where such Court exists, or where no option as to the selection of the Court is allowed by law:

(b) If, in a suit relating to immoveable property, but not coming under the proviso to section 16, it appear that no part of such property is situate within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the plaint is presented:

(c) If, in any other case, it appear that the cause of action did not arise, and that none of the defendants are dwelling or carrying on business, or personally working for gain, within such local limits.

On returning a plaint, the Judge shall, with his own hand, endorse thereon the date of its presentation and return, the name of the party presenting it, and a brief statement of the reason for returning it.

Procedure on returning plaint.

58. The plaintiff shall endorse on the plaint, or annex thereto, a memorandum of the documents (if any) which he has filed along with it; and if the plaint be admitted, shall present as many copies on plain paper of the plaint as there are defendants, unless the Court by reason of the length of the plaint or the number of the defendants, or for any other sufficient reason, permit him to present a like number of concise statements of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required in the suit, in which case he shall present such statements.

Procedure on admitting plaint.

Concise statements.

If the plaintiff sues, or the defendant or any of the defendants is sued, in a representative capacity, such statements shall show in what capacity the plaintiff or defendant sues or is sued.

The plaintiff may, by leave of the Court, amend such statements so as to make them correspond with the plaint.

The chief ministerial officer of the Court shall sign such memorandum and copies or statements if, on examination, he finds them to be correct.

The Court shall also cause the particulars mentioned in section 50 to be entered in a book to be kept for the purpose and called the Register of civil suits. Such entries shall be numbered in every year according to the order in which the plaint is admitted.

61. In case of any suit founded upon a bill of exchange or other negotiable instrument, if it be proved that the instrument is lost, and if an indemnity be given by the plaintiff, to the satisfaction of the Court, against the claims of any other person upon such instrument, the Court may make such decree as it would have made if the plaintiff had produced the instrument in Court when the plaint was presented, and had at the same time delivered a copy of the instrument to be filed with the plaint.

Suits on lost negotiable instruments.

62. If the document on which the plaintiff sues be an entry in a shop-book or other book in his possession or power, the plaintiff shall produce the book at the time of filing the plaint, together with a copy of the entry on which he relies.

Production of shop-book.

The Court, or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall forthwith mark the document for the purpose of identification; and after examining and comparing the copy with the original and attesting the copy if found correct, shall return the book to the plaintiff and cause the copy to be filed.

Original entry to be marked and returned.

63. A document which ought to be produced in Court by the plaintiff when the plaint is presented, or to be entered in the list to be added or annexed to the plaint, and which is not produced or entered accordingly, shall not, without the leave of the Court, be received in evidence on his behalf at the hearing of the suit.

Inadmissibility of document not produced when plaint filed.

Nothing in this section applies to documents produced for cross-examination of the defendant's witnesses, or in answer to any case set up by the defendant, or handed to a witness merely to refresh his memory.

CHAPTER VI.

OF THE ISSUE AND SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

Issue of Summons.

64. When the plaint has been registered, and the copies or concise statements required by section 58 have been filed, a summons may be issued to each defendant to appear and answer the claim on a day to be therein specified, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable,

97. If on the day so fixed for the defendant to appear and answer, it be found that the summons has not been served upon him in consequence of the failure of the plaintiff to pay the court-fee leviable for such service, the Court may order that the suit be dismissed:

If neither party appear, suit to be dismissed.

98. If on the day fixed for the defendant to appear and answer, or on any other subsequent day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, neither party appears, the suit shall be dismissed, unless the Judge, for reasons to be recorded under his hand, otherwise directs.

In such case plaintiff may bring fresh suit;

99. (b). If it is not proved that the summons was duly served, the Court shall direct a second summons to be issued and served on the defendant:

when summons served, but not in due time.

(c) If it is proved that the summons was served on the defendant, but not in sufficient time to enable him to appear and answer on the day fixed in the summons, the Court shall postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day to be fixed by the Court, and shall direct notice of such day to be given to the defendant.

101. If the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit, as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance.

103. When a suit is wholly or partially dismissed under this section, the plaintiff shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. But he may apply for an order to set the dismissal aside; and if it be proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall set aside the dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit.

No order shall be made under the second paragraph of this section unless the plaintiff has served the defendant with notice in writing of his application.

105. If there be more plaintiffs than one, and one or more of them appear, and the others do not appear, the Court may, at the instance of the plaintiff or plaintiffs appearing, permit the suit to proceed in the same way as if all the plaintiffs had appeared, and pass such order as it thinks fit.

107. If a plaintiff or defendant who has been ordered to appear in person under the provisions of section 66 or section 436, does not appear in person, or shew sufficient cause to the satisfaction of the Court for failing so to appear, he shall be subject to all the provisions of the foregoing sections applicable to plaintiffs and defendants, respectively, who do not appear.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF WRITTEN STATEMENTS AND SET-OFF.

Written statements.

110. The parties may, at any time before or at the first hearing of the suit, tender written statements of their respective cases, and the Court shall receive such statements and place them on the record.

Particulars of set-off to be given in written statement.

111. If in a suit for the recovery of money the defendant claims to set-off against the plaintiff's demand any ascertained sum of money legally recoverable by him from the plaintiff, and if in such claim of the defendant against the plaintiff both parties fill the same character as they fill in the plaintiff's suit, the defendant may, at the first hearing of the suit, but not afterwards, unless permitted by the Court, tender a written statement containing the particulars of the debt sought to be set-off.

Inquiry.

The Court shall thereupon inquire into the same, and if it find that the case fulfils the requirements of the former part of this section, and that the amount claimed to be set-off does not exceed the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction, the Court shall set-off the one debt against the other.

Effect of set-off.

Such set-off shall have the same effect as a plaint in a cross-suit, so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in the same suit, both on the original and on the cross-claim; but it shall not affect the lien upon the amount decreed of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree.

Illustrations.

(a) A bequeaths Rs. 2,000 to B, and appoints C his executor and residuary legatee. B dies and D takes out administration to B's effects. C pays Rs. 1,000 as surety for D. Then D sues C for the legacy. C cannot set-off the debt of Rs. 1,000 against the legacy, for neither C nor D fills the same character with respect to the legacy as they fill with respect to the payment of the Rs. 1,000.

(b) A dies intestate and in debt to B. C takes out administration to A's effects, and B buys part of the effects from C. In a suit for the purchase-money by C against B, the latter cannot set-off the debt against the price, for C fills two different characters, one as the vendor to B, in which he sues B, and the other as representative to A.

(c) A sues B on a bill of exchange. B alleges that A has wrongfully neglected to insure B's goods and is liable to him in compensation which he claims to set-off. The amount not being ascertained cannot be set-off.

(d) A sues B on a bill of exchange for Rs. 500. B holds a judgment against A for Rs. 1,000. The two claims being both definite pecuniary demands may be set-off.

(e) A sues B for compensation on account of a trespass. B holds a promissory note for Rs. 1,000 from A and claims to set-off that amount against any sum that A may recover in the suit. B may do so, for as soon as A recovers, both sums are definite pecuniary demands.

(f) A and B sue C for Rs. 1,000. C cannot set-off a debt due to him by A alone.

(g) A sues B and C for Rs. 1,000. B cannot set-off a debt due to him alone by A.

(h) A owes the partnership firm of B and C Rs. 1,000. B dies leaving C surviving. A sues C for a debt of Rs. 1,500 due in his separate character. C may set-off the debt of Rs. 1,000.

112. Except as provided in the last preceding section, no written statement shall be received after the first hearing of the suit:

No written statement to be received after first hearing unless called for by Court.

Provided that the Court may at any time require a written statement, or additional written statement, from any of the parties, and fix a time for presenting the same:

Court may at any time call for written statement.

Provided also that a written statement, or an additional written statement, may, with the permission of the Court, be received at any time for the purpose of answering written statements so required and presented.

113. If any party from whom a written statement is so required fails to present the same within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may pass a decree against him, or make such other order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

Procedure when party fails to present written statement called for by Court.

114. Written statements shall be as brief as the nature of the case admits, and shall not be argumentative, but shall be confined as much as possible to a simple narrative of the facts which the party by whom or on whose behalf the written statement is made believes to be material to the case, and which he either admits or believes he will be able to prove.

Frame of written statements.

Every such statement shall be divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, and each paragraph containing as nearly as may be a separate allegation.

115. Written statements shall be subscribed and verified in the manner hereinbefore provided for subscribing and verifying plaints, and no written statement shall be received unless it be so subscribed and verified.

Written statements to be subscribed and verified.

The provisions of section 52 as to examining witnesses as to the fact of signature shall apply in the case of written statements.

116. If it appear to the Court that any written statement, whether called for by the Court or spontaneously tendered, is argumentative or prolix, or contains matter irrelevant to the suit, the Court may amend it then and there, or may, by an order to be endorsed thereon, reject the same, or return it to the party by whom it was made for amendment within a time to be fixed by the Court, imposing such terms as to costs or otherwise as the Court thinks fit.

Rejection of argumentative, prolix or irrelevant written statements.

When any amendment is made under this section, the Judge shall attest it by his signature.

Attestation of amendments.

When a statement has been rejected under this section, the party making it shall not present another written statement, unless it be expressly called for or allowed by the Court.

Effect of rejection.

CHAPTER IX.

OF THE EXAMINATION OF THE PARTIES BY THE COURT.

117. At the first hearing of the suit, the Court shall ascertain from the defendant or his pleader whether he admits or denies the allegations of fact made in the plaint and shall ascertain from each party or his pleader whether he admits or denies such allegations of fact as are made in the written statement (if any) of the opposite party, and as are not expressly or by necessary implication admitted or denied by the party against whom they are made. The Court shall record such admissions and denials.

Ascertainment from each party whether allegations in written statements are admitted or denied.

118. At the first hearing of the suit, or at any subsequent hearing, any party appearing in person or present in Court, or any person able to answer any material questions relating to the suit by whom such party or his pleader is accompanied, may be examined orally by the Court, and the Court may, if it thinks fit, put in the course of such examination questions suggested by either party.

Oral examination of party, or companion of himself or his pleader.

119. The substance of the examination shall be reduced to writing by the Judge, and shall form part of the record.

Substance of examination to be written.

120. If the pleader of any party who appears by a pleader refuses or is unable to answer any material question relating to the suit which the Court is of opinion that the party whom he represents ought to answer, and is likely to be able to answer if interrogated in person, the Court may postpone the hearing of the suit to a future day, and direct that such party shall appear in person on such day.

Consequence of refusal or inability of pleader to answer.

If such party fails without lawful excuse to appear in person on the day so appointed, the Court may pass a decree against him, or make such order in relation to the suit as it thinks fit.

CHAPTER X.

OF DISCOVERY AND OF THE ADMISSION, INSPECTION, PRODUCTION, IMPOUNDING AND RETURN OF DOCUMENTS.

121. Any party may at any time by leave of the Court, deliver through the Court interrogatories in writing for the examination of the opposite party, or where there are more opposite parties than one, any one or more of such parties, with a note at the foot thereof stating which of such interrogatories each of such persons is required to answer:

Power to deliver interrogatories.

Provided that no party shall deliver more than one set of interrogatories to the same person without the permission of the Court, and that no defendant shall deliver interrogatories for the examination of the plaintiff unless such defendant has previously tendered a written statement and such statement has been received and placed on the record.

Service of interrogatories.

122. Interrogatories delivered under section 121 shall be served on the pleader (if any) of the party interrogated or in the manner hereinbefore provided for the service of summons, and the provisions of sections 79, 80, 81 and 82 shall, in the latter case, apply so far as may be practicable.

Inquiry into propriety of exhibiting interrogatories.

123. The Court, in adjusting the costs of the suit, shall, at the instance of any party, inquire or cause inquiry to be made into the propriety of delivering such interrogatories; and if it thinks that such interrogatories have been delivered unreasonably, vexatiously or at improper length, the costs occasioned by the said interrogatories and the answers thereto shall be borne by the party in fault.

Service of interrogatories on officer of corporation or company.

124. If any party to a suit be a body corporate or a joint stock company, whether incorporated or not, or any other body of persons empowered by law to sue or be sued, whether in his own name or in the name of any officer or other person, any opposite party may apply to the Court for an order allowing him to deliver interrogatories to any member or officer of such corporation, company or body, and an order may be made accordingly.

Power to strike out interrogatories as irrelevant, &c.

125. Any party called upon to answer interrogatories, whether by himself or by any such member or officer, may refuse to answer any interrogatory on the ground that it is irrelevant, or is not put bonâ fide for the purposes of the suit, or that the matter inquired after is not sufficiently material at that stage of the suit, or on any other like ground.

Time for filing affidavit in answer.

126. Interrogatories shall be answered by affidavit to be filed in Court within ten days from the service thereof or within such further time as the Judge may allow.

Procedure where a party omits to answer sufficiently.

127. If any person interrogated omits or refuses to answer, or answers insufficiently, any interrogatory, the party interrogating may apply to the Court for an order requiring him to answer or to answer further, as the case may be. And an order may be made requiring him to answer or to answer further either by affidavit or by viva voce examination as the Judge may direct: Provided that the Judge shall not require an answer to any interrogatory which in his opinion need not have been answered under section 125.

Power to demand admission of genuineness of documents.

128. Either party may, by a notice through the Court, within a reasonable time not less than ten days before the hearing, require the other party to admit (saving all just exceptions to the admissibility of such document in evidence) the genuineness of any document material to the suit.

The admission shall also be made in writing, signed by the other party or his pleader and filed in Court.

If such notice be not given, no costs of proving such document shall be allowed, unless the Judge otherwise orders.

If such notice is not complied with within four days after its being served, and the Judge thinks it reasonable that the admission should have been made, the party refusing shall bear the expense of proving such document, whatever may be the result of the suit.

Application for order for discovery of document.

129. The Court may, at any time during the pendency therein of any suit, order any party to the suit to declare by affidavit all the documents which are or have been in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in the suit, and any party to the suit may, at any time before the first hearing, apply to the Court for a like order.

130. The Court may, at any time during the pendency therein of any suit, order the production by any party thereto of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to any matter in question in such suit or proceeding as the Court thinks right; and the Court may deal with such documents when produced in such manner as appears just.

Notice to produce for inspection documents referred to in plaint, &c.

131. Every party to a suit may at any time before or at the hearing thereof give notice through the Court to any other party in whose plaint, written statement or affidavits reference is made to any document, to produce such document in the presence of such officer as the Court appoints in this behalf, for the inspection of the party giving such notice or of his pleader, and to permit such party or pleader to take copies thereof.

Consequence of non-compliance with such notice.

No party failing to comply with such notice shall afterwards be at liberty to put any such document in evidence on his behalf in such suit, unless he satisfies the Court that such document relates only to his own title, or that he had some other and sufficient cause for not complying with such notice.

Party receiving such notice to deliver notice when and where inspection may be had.

132. The party to whom such notice is given shall, within ten days from the receipt thereof, deliver through the Court to the party giving the same a notice stating a time within three days from such delivery at which the documents or such of them as he does not object to produce, may be inspected at his pleader's office or some other convenient place, and stating which, if any, of the documents he objects to produce, and on what grounds.

Application for order of inspection.

133. If any party served with notice under section 131 omits to give notice under section 132 of the time for inspection, or objects to give inspection, or names an inconvenient place for inspection, the party desiring it may apply to the Court for an order of inspection.

Application to be founded on affidavit.

134. Except in the case of documents referred to in the plaint, written statement, or affidavit of the party against whom the application is made, or disclosed in his affidavit of documents, such application shall be founded upon an affidavit shewing (a) of what documents inspection is sought, (b) that the party applying is entitled to inspect them, and (c) that they are in the possession or power of the party against whom the application is made.

Power to order issue or question on which right to discovery depends to be first determined.

135. If the party from whom discovery of any kind or inspection is sought, objects to the same or any part thereof, and if the Court is satisfied that the right to such discovery or inspection depends on the determination of any issue or question in dispute in the suit, or that for any other reason it is desirable that any such issue or question should be determined before deciding upon the right to the discovery or inspection, the Court may order that the issue or question be determined first and reserve the question as to the discovery or inspection.

Consequences of failure to answer or give inspection.

136. If any party fail to comply with any order under this chapter to answer interrogatories or for discovery or inspection, which has been duly served, he shall, if a plaintiff, be liable to have his suit dismissed for want of prosecution, and if a defendant, to have his defence, if any, struck out, and to be placed in the same position as if he had not appeared and answered; and the party interrogating or seeking discovery or inspection may apply to the Court for an order to that effect, and the Court may make such order accordingly.

Any party failing to comply with any order under this chapter to answer interrogatories or for discovery or inspection which has been served personally upon him, shall also be deemed guilty of an offence under section 188 of the Indian Penal Code.

Court may send for papers from its own records or from other Courts.

137. The Court may, of its own accord, and may, in its discretion, upon the application of any of the parties to a suit, send for, either from its own records or from any other Court, the record of any other suit or proceeding, and inspect the same.

Every application made under this section shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be supported by an affidavit of the applicant or his pleader, shewing how the record is material to the suit in which the application is made, and that the applicant cannot without unreasonable delay or expense obtain a duly authenticated copy of the record or of such portion thereof as the applicant requires, or that the production of the original is necessary for the purposes of justice.

Nothing contained in this section shall be deemed to enable the Court to use in evidence any document which under the Indian Evidence Act would be inadmissible in the suit.

Documentary evidence to be in readiness at first hearing.

138. The parties or their pleaders shall bring with them and have in readiness at the first hearing of the suit, to be produced when called for by the Court, all the documentary evidence of every description in their possession or power, on which they intend to rely, and which has not already been filed in Court, and all documents which the Court at any time before such hearing has ordered to be produced.

Effect of non-production of documents.

139. No documentary evidence in the possession or power of any party the production of which has been called for under section 138, and which has not been produced, shall be received at any subsequent stage of the proceedings unless good cause be shewn to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof. And the Judge receiving any such evidence shall record his reasons for so doing.

Documents to be received by Court.

140. The Court shall receive the documents respectively produced by the parties at the first hearing, provided that the documents produced by each party be accompanied by an accurate list thereof prepared in such form as the High Court may from time to time direct.

Rejection of irrelevant or inadmissible documents.

The Court may at any stage of the suit reject any document which it considers irrelevant or otherwise inadmissible, recording the grounds of such rejection.

No documents to be placed on record unless proved.

141. No document shall be placed on the record unless it has been proved or admitted in accordance with the law of evidence for the time being in force. Every document so proved or admitted shall be endorsed with the number and title of the suit, the name of the person producing it, and the date on which it was produced. The Judge shall then endorse with his own hand a statement that it was proved against or admitted by (as the case may be) the person against whom it is used. The document shall then be filed as part of the record:

Proved documents to be marked and filed.

Entries in shop-books.

Provided that, if the document be an entry in a shop-book or other book, the party on whose behalf such book is produced may furnish a copy of the entry, which may be endorsed as aforesaid, and shall be filed as part of the record, and the Court shall mark the entry and shall then return the book to the person producing it.

All documents produced at the first hearing and not so proved or admitted shall be returned to th parties respectively producing them.

Rejected documents to be marked,

142. When a document so proved or admitted is relied on as evidence by either party, but the Court considers it inadmissible, it shall be further endorsed with the addition of the word "rejected," and the endorsement shall be signed by the Judge.

and returned, unless detained by Court.

The document shall then be returned to the party who produced it.

143. Notwithstanding anything contained in sections 62, 141 and 142, the Court may, if it see sufficient cause, direct any document or book produced before it in any suit to be impounded and kept in the custody of an officer of the Court, for such period and subject to such conditions as the Court thinks fit.

Court may order any document to be impounded.

144. In suits in which an appeal is not allowed, when the suit has been disposed of, and in suits in which an appeal is allowed, when the time for preferring an appeal from the decree has elapsed, or, if an appeal has been preferred, then after the appeal has been disposed of, any person, whether a party to the suit or not, desirous of receiving back any document produced by him in the suit, and placed on the record, shall, unless the document is impounded under section 143, be entitled to receive back the same:

After lapse of time for appeal, document admitted in evidence may be returned.

Provided that a document may be returned at any time before either of such events, if the person applying for such return delivers to the proper officer a certified copy of such document to be substituted for the original:

When document may be returned before time limited.

Provided also that no document shall be returned which, by force of the decree, has become void or useless.

Document not to be returned in certain cases.

On the return of a document which has been admitted in evidence, a receipt shall be given by the party receiving it, in a receipt-book to be kept for the purpose.

Receipt to be given for returned document.

145. The provisions herein contained as to documents shall, so far as may be, apply to all other material objects producible as evidence.

Provisions as to documents applied to material objects.

CHAPTER XI.

OF THE SETTLEMENT OF ISSUES.

146. Issues arise when a material proposition of fact or law is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other.

Framing of issues.

Material propositions are those propositions of law or fact which a plaintiff must allege in order to shew a right to sue.

Each material proposition affirmed by one party and denied by the other must form the subject of a distinct issue.

Issues are of two kinds: (a) issues of fact, (b) issues of law.

At the first hearing of the suit, the Court shall, after reading the plaint and the written statements, if any, and after such examination of the parties as may appear necessary, ascertain upon what material propositions of fact or of law the parties are at variance, and shall thereupon proceed to frame and record the issues on which the right decision of the case appears to the Court to depend.

When issues both of law and of fact arise in the same suit, and the Court is of opinion that the case may be disposed of on the issues of law only, it shall try those issues first, and for that purpose may, if it thinks fit, postpone the settlement of the issues of fact until after the issues of law have been determined.

Nothing in this section requires the Court to frame and record issues when the defendant at the first hearing of the suit makes no defence.

147. The Court may frame the issues from all or any of the following materials:—

Allegations from which issues may be framed.

(a) allegations made on oath by the parties, or by any persons present on their behalf, or made by the pleaders of such parties or persons;

(b) allegations made in the plaint or in the written statements (if any) tendered in the suit, or in answer to interrogatories delivered in the suit;

(c) the contents of documents produced by either party.

148. If the Court be of opinion that the issues cannot be correctly framed without the examination of some person not before the Court, or without the inspection of some document not produced in the suit, it may adjourn the framing of the issues to a future day, to be fixed by the Court, and may (subject to the rules contained in the Indian Evidence Act) compel the attendance of any person or the production of any document by the person in whose hands it may be, by summons or other process.

Court may examine witnesses or documents before framing issues.

149. The Court may at any time before passing a decree amend, and may frame additional issues on such terms as it thinks fit, and all such amendments or additional issues as may be necessary for determining the controversy between the parties shall be so made or framed.

Power to amend, add and strike out issues.

The Court may also, at any time before passing a decree, strike out any issues that appear to it to be wrongly framed or introduced.

150. When the parties to a suit are agreed as to the question of fact or of law to be decided between them, they may state the same in the form of an issue, and enter into an agreement in writing

Questions of fact or law may by agreement be stated in the form of an issue.

(a) that upon the finding of the Court in the affirmative or the negative of such issue, a sum of money specified in the agreement, or to be ascertained by the Court, or in such manner as the Court may direct, shall be paid by one of the parties to the other of them, or that one of them be declared entitled to some right or subject to some liability specified in the agreement,

(b) that upon such finding some property specified in the agreement and in dispute in the suit shall be delivered by one of the parties to the other of them, or as that other may direct, or

(c) that upon such finding one or more of the parties shall do or abstain from doing some particular act, specified in the agreement, and relating to the matter in dispute.

Court if satisfied that the agreement was executed in good faith may pronounce judgment.

151. If the Court be satisfied, after making such inquiry as it deems proper,

(a) that the agreement was duly executed by the parties,

(b) that they have a substantial interest in the decision of such question as aforesaid, and

(c) that the same is fit to be tried and decided, it may proceed to record and try the issue, and state its finding or opinion thereon in the same manner as if the issue had been framed by the Court; and may, upon the finding or decision on such issue, pronounce judgment according to the terms of the agreement; and upon the judgment so given, decree shall follow and may be executed in the same way as if the judgment had been pronounced in a contested suit.

CHAPTER XII.

DISPOSAL OF THE SUIT AT THE FIRST HEARING.

If parties are not at issue on any question of law or fact.

152. If at the first hearing of a suit it appears that the parties are not at issue on any question of law or of fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment.

If one of several defendants be not at issue with the plaintiff.

153. Where there are more defendants than one, and any one of the defendants is not at issue with the plaintiff on any question of law or fact, the Court may at once pronounce judgment for or against such defendant, and the suit shall proceed only against the other defendants.

If parties are at issue on questions of law or fact.

154. When the parties are at issue on some question of law or of fact, and issues have been framed by the Court as hereinbefore provided, if the Court be satisfied that no further argument or evidence than the parties can at once supply is required upon such of the issues as may be sufficient for the decision of the suit, and that no injustice will result from proceeding with the suit forthwith, the Court may proceed to determine such issues, and if the finding thereon is sufficient for the decision, may pronounce judgment accordingly, whether the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only or for the final disposal of the suit:

Court may determine issue and pronounce judgment.

Provided that, where the summons has been issued for the settlement of issues only, the parties or their pleaders are present and none of them object.

If the finding is not sufficient for the decision, the Court shall postpone the further hearing of the suit, and shall fix a day for the production of such further evidence, or for such further argument as the case requires.

If either party fails to produce his evidence, Court may pronounce judgment.

155. If the summons has been issued for the final disposal of the suit, and either party fails without sufficient cause to produce the evidence on which he relies, the Court may at once pronounce judgment, or may if it thinks fit, after framing and recording issues under section 146, adjourn the suit for the production of such evidence as may be necessary to its decision upon such issues.

Procedure where Court cannot pronounce judgment at first hearing.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF ADJOURNMENTS.

Court may grant time, or adjourn hearing.

156. The Court may, if sufficient cause be shewn, at any stage of the suit, grant time to the parties, or to any of them, and may from time to time adjourn the hearing of the suit.

Costs of adjournment.

In all such cases the Court shall fix a day for the further hearing of the suit, and may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to the costs occasioned by the adjournment:

Provided that, when the hearing of evidence has once begun, the hearing of the suit shall be continued from day to day until all the witnesses in attendance have been examined, unless the Court finds the adjournment of the hearing to be necessary for reasons to be recorded by the Judge with his own hand.

Procedure if parties fail to appear on day fixed.

157. If, on any day to which the hearing of the suit is adjourned, the parties or any of them fail to appear, the Court may proceed to dispose of the suit in one of the modes directed in that behalf by chapter VII, or make such other order as it thinks fit.

Court may proceed notwithstanding either party fails to produce his evidence.

158. If any party to a suit to whom time has been granted fails to produce his evidence, or to cause the attendance of his witnesses, or to perform any other act necessary to the further progress of the suit, for which time has been allowed, the Court may, notwithstanding such default, proceed to decide the suit forthwith.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF THE SUMMONING AND ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES.

Summons to attend to give evidence or produce documents.

159. The parties may, after the summons has been delivered for service on the defendant, whether it be for the settlement of issues only, or for the final disposal of the suit, obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, before the day fixed for such settlement or disposal, as the case may be, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents.

Expenses of witnesses to be paid into court on applying for summons.

160. The party applying for a summons shall before the summons is granted and within a period to be fixed by the Court, pay into court such a sum of money as appears to the Court to be sufficient to defray the travelling and other expenses of the person summoned, in passing to and from the Court in which he is required to attend, and for one day's attendance.

Scale of expenses.

If the Court be subordinate to a High Court, regard shall be had, in fixing the scale of such expenses, to the rules (if any) laid down by competent authority.

Tender of expenses to witness.

161. The sum so paid into court shall be tendered to the person summoned, at the time of serving the summons if it can be served personally.

Procedure where insufficient sum paid in.

162. If it appear to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf that the sum paid into court is not sufficient to cover such expenses, the Court may direct such further sum to be paid to the person summoned as appears to be necessary on that account; and, in case of default in payment, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of the party obtaining the summons; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Expenses if witness detained more than one day.

If it be necessary to detain the person summoned for a longer period than one day, the Court may from time to time order the party at whose instance he was summoned, to pay into Court such sum as is sufficient to defray the expenses of his detention for such further period, and in default of such deposit being made, may order such sum to be levied by attachment and sale of the moveable property of the party at whose instance he was summoned; or the Court may discharge the person summoned without requiring him to give evidence; or may both order such levy and discharge such person as aforesaid.

Time, place, and purpose of attendance to be specified in summons.

163. Every summons for the attendance of a person to give evidence or produce a document shall specify the time and place at which he is required to attend, and also whether his attendance is required for the purpose of giving evidence or to produce a document, or for both purposes; and any particular document which the person summoned is called on to produce, shall be described in the summons with reasonable accuracy.

Summons to produce document.

164. Any person may be summoned to produce a document, without being summoned to give evidence; and any person summoned merely to produce a document shall be deemed to have complied with the summons, if he cause such document to be produced instead of attending personally to produce the same.

Power to require persons present in Court to give evidence.

165. Any person present in court may be required by the Court to give evidence or to produce any document then and there in his actual possession or power.

Summons how served.

166. Every summons to a person to give evidence or produce a document shall be served as nearly as may be in manner hereinbefore prescribed for the service of summons on the defendant; and the rules contained in chapter VI as to proof of service shall apply in the case of all summonses served under this section.

Time for serving summons.

167. The service shall in all cases be made a sufficient time before the time specified in the summons for the attendance of the person summoned, to allow him a reasonable time for preparation and for travelling to the place at which his attendance is required.

Attachment of property of absconding witness.

168. If the serving-officer certify to the Court that the summons for the attendance of a person, either to give evidence or to produce a document, cannot be served, the Court shall examine the serving-officer on oath touching the non-service and upon being satisfied that such evidence or production is material, and that the person for whose attendance the summons has been issued is absconding or keeping out of the way for the purpose of avoiding the service of the summons, may issue a proclamation requiring him to attend to give evidence, or produce the document, at a time and place to be named therein; and a copy of such proclamation shall be affixed on the outer door of the house in which he ordinarily resides.

If he does not attend at the time and place named in such proclamation, the Court may, in its discretion, at the instance of the party on whose application the summons was issued, make an order for the attachment of the property of the person whose attendance is required, to such amount as the Court thinks fit, not exceeding the amount of the costs of attachment and of the fine which may be imposed under section 170:

Provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property.

If witness appears, attachment may be withdrawn.

169. If, on the attachment of his property, such person appears and satisfies the Court that he did not abscond or keep out of the way to avoid service of the summons, and that he had not notice of the proclamation in time to attend at the time and place named therein, the Court shall direct that the property be released from attachment, and shall make such order as to the costs of the attachment as it thinks fit.

Procedure if witness fails to appear.

170. If such person does not appear, or appearing, fails to satisfy the Court that he did not abscond or keep out of the way to avoid service of the summons, and that he had not notice of the proclamation in time to attend at the time and place named therein, the Court may impose upon him such fine not exceeding five hundred rupees as the Court thinks fit, having regard to his condition in life and all the circumstances of the case, and may order the property attached, or any part thereof, to be sold for the purpose of satisfying all costs incurred in consequence of such attachment, together with the amount of the said fine, if any:

Provided that if the person whose attendance is required pays into court the costs and fine as aforesaid, the Court shall order the property to be released from attachment.

Court may of its own accord summon as witnesses strangers to suit.

171. Subject to the rules of this Code as to attendance and appearance and to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act, if the Court at any time thinks it necessary to examine any person other than a party to the suit, and not named as a witness by a party to the suit, the Court may, of its own motion, cause such person to be summoned as a witness to give evidence, or to produce any document in his possession, on a day to be appointed, and may examine him as a witness or require him to produce such document.

Persons summoned to give evidence must attend.

172. Subject as last aforesaid, whoever is summoned to appear and give evidence in a suit must attend at the time and place named in the summons for that purpose, and whoever is summoned to produce a document must either attend to produce it, or cause it to be produced, at such time and place.

When they may depart.

173. No person so summoned and attending shall depart unless and until (a) he has been examined or has produced the document and the Court has risen, or (b) he has obtained the Court's leave to depart.

Consequences of non-attendance.

174. If any person on whom a summons to give evidence or produce a document has been served fails to comply with the summons, or if any person so summoned and attending departs in contravention of section 173, the Court may order him to be arrested and brought before the Court:

Provided that no such order shall be made when the Court has reason to believe that the person so failing had a lawful excuse for such failure.

When any person so brought before the Court fails to satisfy it that he had a lawful excuse for not complying with the summons, the Court may sentence him to fine not exceeding five hundred rupees.

Explanation.—Non-payment or non-tender of a sum sufficient to defray the expenses mentioned in section 160 shall be deemed a lawful excuse within the meaning of this section.

Consequences of refusal to give evidence or produce documents.

If any person so apprehended and brought before the Court cannot, owing to the absence of the parties or any of them, give the evidence or produce the document which he has been summoned to give or produce, the Court may require him to give reasonable bail or other security for his appearance at such time and place as it thinks fit, and on such bail or security being given, may release him.

Procedure when witness absconds.

175. If any person so failing to comply with a summons absconds or keeps out of the way, so that he cannot be apprehended and brought before the Court, the provisions of sections 168, 169 and 170 shall, mutatis mutandis, apply.

Person summoned to attend in person if so required.

176. No one shall be bound to attend in person to give evidence or to be examined in Court unless he resides—

(a) within the local limits of its ordinary original jurisdiction, or

(b) without such limits and at a place less than fifty or (where there is railway communication for five-sixths of the distance between the place where he resides and the place where the Court is situate) two hundred miles distant from the Court-house.

Consequence of refusal of party to give evidence when called on by the Court.

177. If any party to a suit present in Court refuses, without lawful excuse, when required by the Court, to give evidence, or to produce any document then and there in his actual possession or power, the Court may in its discretion either pass a decree against him, or make such other order in relation to the suit as the Court thinks fit.

Rules as to witnesses to apply to parties summoned.

178. Whenever any party to a suit is required to give evidence or to produce a document, the rules as to witnesses contained in this Code shall apply to him so far as they are applicable.

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE HEARING OF THE SUIT AND EXAMINATION OF WITNESSES.

Statement and production of evidence by party having right to begin.

179. On the day fixed for the hearing of the suit, or on any other day to which the hearing is adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall state his case and produce his evidence in support of the issues which he is bound to prove.

Rules as to right to begin.

Explanation.—The plaintiff has the right to begin unless where the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff and contends that either in point of law or on some additional facts alleged by the defendant the plaintiff is not entitled to any part of the relief which he seeks, in which case the defendant has the right to begin.

Statement and production of evidence by other party.

Reply by party beginning.

180. The other party shall then state his case and produce his evidence (if any). The party beginning is then entitled to reply.

Where there are several issues, the burden of proving some of which lies on the other party, the party beginning may, at his option, either produce his evidence on those issues or reserve it by way of answer to the evidence produced by the other of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit.

Payment by instalments.

210. In all decrees for the payment of money, the Court may for any sufficient reason order that the amount shall be paid by instalments, with or without interest.

When Court may order payment by instalments.

And after the passing of any such decree the Court may, on the application of the judgment-debtor, and with the consent of the decree-holder, order that the amount decreed be paid by instalments on such terms as to the payment of interest, the attachment of the property of the defendant, or the taking of security from him, or otherwise, as it thinks fit:

Save as provided in this section and section 206, no decree shall be altered at the request of parties.

In suits for land, Court may decree payment of mesne profits with interest.

211. When the suit is for land or other property yielding rent or other profit, the Court may provide in the decree for the payment of rent or mesne profits in respect of such property from the institution of the suit until the delivery of possession to the party in whose favour the decree is made, or until the expiration of three years from the date of the decree (whichever event first occurs), with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court thinks fit.

Explanation.—'Mesne profits' of property mean those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received, or might with ordinary diligence have received, therefrom.

Court may determine amount of mesne profits prior to passing decree, or may reserve inquiry.

212. When the suit is for immoveable property and for mesne profits which have accrued on the property during a period prior to the institution of the suit, and the amount of such profits is disputed, the Court may either determine the amount by the decree itself, or may pass a decree for the property and direct an inquiry into the amount of mesne profits, and dispose of the same on further orders.

Administration-suit.

213. When the suit is for an account of any property and for its due administration under the decree of the Court, the Court, before making the decree, shall order such accounts and inquiries to be taken and made, and give such other directions as it thinks fit.

In the administration by the Court of the property of any person who dies after this Code comes into force, if such property proves to be insufficient for the payment in full of his debts and liabilities, the same rules shall be observed as to the respective rights of secured and unsecured creditors and as to debts and liabilities proveable, and as to the valuation of annuities and future and contingent liabilities respectively, as may be in force for the time being with respect to the estates of persons adjudged insolvent;

And all persons who in any such case would be entitled to be paid out of such property may come in under the decree for its administration, and make such claims against the same as they may respectively be entitled to by virtue of this Code.

Applications under section 265 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, shall be deemed to be suits within the meaning of this section.

Suit to enforce right of pre-emption.

214. When the suit is to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a particular sale of property, and the Court finds for the plaintiff, if the amount of purchase-money has not been paid into Court, the decree shall specify a day on or before which it shall be so paid, and shall declare that on payment of such purchase-money, together with the costs (if any) decreed against him, the plaintiff shall obtain possession of the property, but that if such money and costs are not so paid, the suit shall stand dismissed with costs.

Suit for dissolution of partnership.

215. When the suit is for the dissolution of a partnership, the Court, before making its decree, may pass an order fixing the day on which the partnership shall stand dissolved, and directing such accounts to be taken and other acts to be done as it thinks fit.

If set-off be allowed.

216. If the defendant has set-off the amount of a debt against the claim of the plaintiff, and such set-off has been allowed, the decree shall state what amount is due to the plaintiff and what amount (if any) is due to the defendant, and shall be for the recovery of any sum which appears to be due to either party.

Effect of decree.

The decree of the Court with respect to any sum awarded to the defendant shall have the same effect, and be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal or otherwise, as if such sum had been claimed by the defendant in a separate suit against the plaintiff.

Certified copies of decree and judgment to be furnished.

217. Certified copies of the judgment and decree shall be furnished to the parties on application to the Court, and at their expense.

CHAPTER XVIII.

OF COSTS.

Costs of applications.

218. When disposing of any application under this Code, the Court may give to either party the costs of such application, or may reserve the consideration of such costs for any future stage of the proceedings.

Judgment to direct by whom costs are to be paid.

219. The judgment shall direct by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, whether by himself or by any other party to the suit, and whether in whole or in what part or proportion.

Power of Court as to costs.

220. The Court shall have full power to give and apportion costs of every application and suit in any manner it thinks fit, and the fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the case is no bar to the exercise of such power:

Provided if the Court directs that the costs of any application or suit shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing.

Costs may be set-off against sum admitted or found to be due.

221. The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by another shall be set-off against a sum which is admitted or is found in the suit to be due from the former to the latter, but such direction shall not affect the lien upon the amount decreed of any pleader in respect of the costs payable to him under the decree.

Saving of pleader's lien.

Interest on costs.

Payment of costs out of subject-matter.

222. The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent. per annum and may direct that costs, with or without interest, be paid out of or charged upon the subject-matter of the suit.

CHAPTER XIX.

OF THE EXECUTION OF DECREES.

A.—Of the Court by which Decrees may be executed.

Court by which decree may be executed.

223. A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution under the provisions hereinafter contained.

The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court,

(a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, or personally works for gain, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(b) if such person has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(c) if the decree direct the sale of immoveable property situate outside the district within which the Court which passed it is situate, or

(d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing, that the decree should be executed by such other Court.

The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any Court subordinate thereto.

The Court to which a decree is sent under this section for execution shall certify to the Court which passed it, the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same, the circumstances attending such failure.

If the decree has been passed in a case cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and the Court which passed it wishes it to be executed in Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, such Court may send to the local Court of Small Causes the copies and certificate respectively mentioned in clauses (a), (b) and (c) of section 224; and such Court of Small Causes shall thereupon execute the decree as if it had been passed by itself.

If the Court to which a decree is to be sent for execution is situate within the same district as the Court which passed such decree, such Court shall send the same directly to the former Court. But if the Court to which the decree is to be sent for execution is situate in a different district, the Court which passed it shall send it to the District Court of the district in which the decree is to be executed.

Procedure when Court desires that its own decree shall be executed by another Court.

224. The Court sending a decree for execution under section 223 shall send therewith

(a) a copy of the decree;

The order shall be proclaimed at some place on or adjacent to such property by beat of drum or Private alienation of property after attachment to be void.

276. When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid, any private alienation of the property attached, whether by sale, gift, mortgage or otherwise, and any payment of the debt or dividend or a delivery of the share to the judgment-debtor during the continuance f the attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

278. If any claim be preferred to, or any objection be made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree, on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, the Court shall proceed to investigate the claim or objection with the like power as regards the examination of the claimant or objector, and in all other respects, as if he was a party to the suit:

Provided that no such investigation shall be made where the Court considers that the claim or objection was designedly or unnecessarily delayed.

280. If upon the said investigation the Court is satisfied that, for the reason stated in the claim or objection, such property was not, when attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor or of some person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, or that, being in the possession of the judgment-debtor at such time, it was so in his possession, not on his own account or as his own property, but on account of or in trust for some other person, or partly on his own account and partly on account of some other person, the Court shall pass an order for releasing the property wholly or to such extent as it thinks fit, from attachment.

Disallowance of claim to release of property attached.

281. If the Court is satisfied that the property was, at the time it was attached, in possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property and not on account of any other person, or was in the possession of some other person in trust for him, or in the occupancy of a tenant or other person paying rent to him, the Court shall disallow the claim.

282. If the Court is satisfied that the property is subject to a mortgage or lien in favour of some person not in possession, and thinks fit to continue the attachment, it may do so, subject to such mortgage or lien.

Saving of suits to establish right to attached property.

283. The party against whom an order under section 280, 281 or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

Irregularity not to vitiate sale of moveable property, but any person injured may sue.

298. No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale of moveable property shall vitiate the sale; but any person sustaining any injury by reason of such irregularity at the hand of any other person may institute a suit against him for compensation, or (if such other person be the purchaser) for the recovery of the specific property and for compensation in default of such recovery.

Vesting order in case of other property.

303. In the case of any moveable property not hereinbefore provided for, the Court may make an order vesting such property in the purchaser or as he may direct; and such property shall vest accordingly.

304. Sales of immoveable property in execution of a decree may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes.

Postponement of sale of land to enable defendant to raise amount of decree.

305. When an order for the sale of immoveable property has been made, if the judgment-debtor can satisfy the Court that there is reason to believe that the amount of the decree may be raised by mortgage or lease or private sale of such property, or some part thereof, or of any other immoveable property of the judgment-debtor, the Court may on his application postpone the sale of property comprised in the order for sale for such period as it thinks proper, to enable him to raise the amount.

Certificate to judgment-debtor.

In such case the Court shall grant a certificate to the judgment-debtor authorizing him, within a period to be mentioned therein, to make the proposed mortgage, lease or sale: provided that all moneys payable under such mortgage, lease or sale, shall be paid into Court and not to the judgment-debtor.

Where such certificate has been granted and so long as it remains in force, the provisions of section 248 shall not apply.

Deposit by purchaser of immoveable property.

306. On every sale of immoveable property under this chapter, the person declared to be the purchaser shall pay immediately after such declaration a deposit of twenty-five per centum on the amount of his purchase-money to the officer conducting the sale, and, in default of such deposit, the property shall forthwith be put up again and sold.

308. In default of payment within the period mentioned in the last preceding section, the deposit, after defraying the expenses of the sale, shall be forfeited to Government, and the property shall be re-sold, and the defaulting purchaser shall forfeit all claim to the property or to any part of the sum for which it may subsequently be sold.

Notification on re-sale of immoveable property.

309. Every re-sale of immoveable property in default of payment of the purchase-money within the period allowed for such payment, shall be made after the issue of a fresh notification in the manner and for the period hereinbefore prescribed for the sale.

310. When the property sold in execution of a decree is a share of undivided immoveable property, and two or more persons, of whom one is a co-sharer, respectively advance the same sum at any bidding at such sale, such bidding shall be deemed to be the bidding of the co-sharer.

Sale of land not set aside on ground of irregularity unless in case of substantial injury.

311. The decree-holder or any person whose immoveable property has been sold under this chapter may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity in publishing or conducting it; but no sale shall be set aside on the ground of irregularity unless the applicant proves to the satisfaction of the Court that he has sustained substantial injury by reason of such irregularity.

Effect of objection being disallowed and of its being allowed.

312. If no such application as is mentioned in the last preceding section be made, or if such application be made and the objection be disallowed, the Court shall pass an order confirming the sale as regards the parties to the suit and the purchaser.

If such application be made, and if the objection be allowed, the Court shall pass an order setting aside the sale.

No suit to set aside on the ground of such irregularity an order passed under this section shall be brought by the party against whom such order has been made.

Power to apply to set aside the sale.

313. The purchaser at any such sale may apply to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground that the person whose property purported to be sold had no saleable interest therein, and the Court may make such order as it thinks fit: provided that no order to set aside a sale shall be made, unless the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder have had opportunity of being heard against such order.

Confirmation of sale.

314. No sale of immoveable property shall become absolute until it has been confirmed by the Court.

If sale set aside, price to be returned to purchaser.

315. When a sale of immoveable property is set aside under section 312 or 313, or when it is found that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property which purported to be sold and the purchaser is for that reason deprived of it, the purchaser shall be entitled to receive back his purchase-money (with or without interest as the Court may direct) from any person to whom the purchase-money has been paid.

The repayment of the said purchase-money and of the interest (if any) allowed by the Court may be enforced against such person under the rules provided by this Code for the execution of a decree for money.

Certificate to purchaser of immoveable property.

Certificate to state name of actual purchaser.

316. When a sale of immoveable property has become absolute in manner aforesaid, the Court shall grant a certificate stating the name of the person who, at the time of sale, is declared to be the purchaser and the date of such sale.

Benámí purchaser not recognized.

317. No suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person, or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims.

Nothing in this section shall bar a suit to obtain a declaration that the name of the certified purchaser was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without the consent of the real purchaser.

Delivery of immoveable property in occupancy of judgment-debtor.

318. When the property sold is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor or of some person on his behalf, or of some person claiming under a title created by the judgment-debtor subsequently to the attachment of such property, and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under section 316, the Court shall, on application by the purchaser, order delivery to be made by putting the purchaser or any person whom he may appoint to receive delivery on his behalf in possession of the property, and, if need be, by removing any person who refuses to vacate the same.

Delivery of immoveable property in the occupancy of tenant.

319. When the property sold is in the occupancy of a tenant or other person entitled to occupy the same, and a certificate in respect thereof has been granted under section 316, the Court shall order delivery thereof to be made by affixing a copy of the certificate of sale in some conspicuous place on the property, and proclaiming to the occupant by beat of drum or in such other mode as may be customary, at some convenient place, that the interest of the judgment-debtor has been transferred to the purchaser.

Power to prescribe rules for transferring to Collector execution of decrees sale of land.

320. The Local Government may, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, declare by notification in the official Gazette that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immoveable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immoveable property, shall be transferred to the Collector; and rescind or modify any such declaration.

Power to prescribe rules as to transmission, execution and retransmission of decrees.

The Local Government may also from time to time prescribe rules for the transmission of the decree from the Court to the Collector, and for regulating the procedure of the Collector and his subordinates in executing the same, and for retransmitting the decree from the Collector to the Court.

Power of Collector as to sale of land in execution of decree.

321. Whenever the execution of a decree has been so transferred, the Collector may—

(a) sell the property comprised in the decree by public auction and either in one or more lots as he thinks fit:

(b) fix a reasonable reserved price for each lot:

(c) adjourn the sale for a reasonable time, whenever he deems the adjournment necessary for the purpose of obtaining a fair price for the property, recording his reasons for such adjournment:

(d) buy in the property offered for sale and re-sell the same.

Powers of Collector as to execution of certain money-decrees so transferred.

322. Whenever the execution of a decree not being a decree directing the sale of immoveable property in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same, but being a decree for money in satisfaction of which the Court has ordered the sale of immoveable property, has been so transferred, the Collector may either proceed as the Court would proceed under section 305, or if he has reason to believe that the judgment-debts of the judgment-debtor can be discharged without a sale of the whole of such property, the Collector may (notwithstanding any order under section 303, but subject to such rules as may from time to time be made in this behalf by the Chief Controlling Revenue Authority) raise the amount necessary to discharge such debts with interest thereon according to the decree, or, if the decree makes no provision as to interest, then with interest (if any) at such rate as he thinks fit,

(a) by letting in perpetuity, or for a term, on payment of a premium equivalent to such amount, the whole or any part of the judgment-debtor's immoveable property: or

(b) by mortgaging the whole or any part of such property: or

(c) by selling part of such property: or

(e) partly by one of such modes and partly by another or others of them.

For the purpose of managing under this section the whole or any part of such property, the Collector may exercise all the powers of its owner.

Procedure of Collector.

323. In the case of a decree for money, if the Collector proposes to proceed under section 322, he shall publish a notice in the language of the district, calling upon all persons holding decrees against the judgment-debtor to notify the same in writing to the Collector within sixty days from the date of such publication.

Such notice shall be published by being posted in the court-house of the Court which made the order under section 304, and at such other places (if any) as the Collector thinks fit.

So long as any letting or management under section 322 continues, the judgment-debtor and his representative in interest shall be incompetent to mortgage, charge, lease or alienate the property so let or managed, or any part thereof.

Sale by Collector.

324. If on the expiration of the letting or management, the amount necessary to discharge such debts in full with the interest (if any) payable thereon has not been raised, the Collector shall notify the fact in writing to the judgment-debtor or his representative, stating at the same time that, if the balance necessary to discharge such debts and interest is not paid to the Collector within six weeks of the date of such notice, the Collector will proceed to sell the said property; and if on the expiration of the said six weeks the said balance is not so paid, the Collector shall sell such property accordingly.

Sale, &c., to be reported to Court by Collector.

325. Whenever the Collector sells any property pursuant to the said order of sale or exercises any of the powers conferred upon him by section 321 or 322, he shall inform the Court which made such order of the fact of such sale or exercise, and shall render accounts to such Court of his receipts and payments in respect of the said property, and shall hold the balance at the disposal of such Court.

Application of balance.

Such balance (after deducting therefrom any debts due or liabilities incurred to Government by the judgment-debtor) shall be applied rateably in discharging the claims of all the decree-holders who have complied with the said notice; and no other person making any claim against the property so let or managed, or against such proceeds, shall be entitled to be paid thereout.

When Court may authorize Collector to stay public sale of land.

326. When, in any local area in which no declaration under section 320 is in force, the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable, and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation or management of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him, instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share. The provisions of sections 322 to 325 (both inclusive) shall in such case apply to the Collector.

Local rules as to sales of land in execution of decrees for money.

327. The Local Government may from time to time, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, make special rules for any local area imposing conditions in respect of sale of any class of interests in land in execution of decrees for money, where such interests are so uncertain or undetermined as in the opinion of the Local Government to make it impossible to fix their value:

and if, when this Code comes into operation in any local area, any special rules as to sale of land in execution of decrees are in force therein, the Local Government may continue such rules in force, or may from time to time, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, modify the same.

All rules so made or continued, and all such modifications of the same, shall be published in the local official Gazette, and shall thereupon have the force of law.

II.—Of Resistance to Execution.

Procedure in case of obstruction to execution of decree.

328. If in the execution of a decree for the possession of property, the officer charged with the execution of the warrant is resisted or obstructed by any person, the decree-holder may complain to the Court at any time within one month from the time of such resistance or obstruction.

The Court shall fix a day for investigating the complaint, and shall summon the party against whom the complaint is made to answer the same.

329. If the Court is satisfied that the obstruction or resistance was occasioned by the judgment-debtor or by some person at his instigation, the Court shall inquire into the matter of the complaint, and pass such order as it thinks fit.

Procedure in case of obstruction by judgment-debtor or at his instigation.

330. If the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, and that the complainant is still resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some other person at his instigation, the Court may, at the instance of the decree-holder and without prejudice to any penalty to which such judgment-debtor or other person may be liable, under the Indian Penal Code or any other law, for such resistance or obstruction, commit the judgment-debtor or such other person to jail for a term which may extend to thirty days, and direct that the decree-holder be put into possession of the property.

Procedure when obstruction continues.

331. If the resistance or obstruction has been occasioned by any person other than the judgment-debtor claiming in good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the claim shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the decree-holder as plaintiff and the claimant as defendant; and the Court shall, without prejudice to any proceedings to which the claimant may be liable under the Indian Penal Code or any other law for the punishment of such resistance or obstruction, proceed to investigate the claim in the same manner and with the like power as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the decree-holder against the claimant under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, section 9, and shall pass such order as it thinks fit for executing or staying execution of the decree.

Procedure in case of obstruction by claimant in good faith, other than judgment-debtor.

332. If any person other than the defendant is dispossessed of any property in execution of a decree, and such person disputes the right of the decree-holder to dispossess him of such property under the decree, on the ground that the property was bond fide in his possession on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, and that it was not comprised in the decree, or that, if it was comprised in the decree, he was not a party to the suit in which the decree was passed, he may apply to the Court.

Procedure in case of person dispossessed of property disputing right of decree holder to be put into possession.

If, after examining the applicant, it appears to the Court that there is probable cause for making the application, the application shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the decree-holder as defendant, and the Court shall proceed to investigate the matter in dispute in the same manner and with the like power as if a suit for the property had been instituted by the applicant against the decree-holder under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, section 9, and shall pass such order as it thinks fit for executing or staying execution of the decree.

In hearing applications under this section, the Court shall confine itself to the grounds of dispute above specified.

Nothing in this section or section 330 applies to a person to whom the judgment-debtor has transferred the property after the institution of the suit in which the decree is made.

333. The order passed under either of section 331 and 332 shall be in the nature of, and shall have the same force as, a decree in a suit, and shall be subject to the same conditions as to appeal or otherwise.

Orders passed under sections 331 and 332 to have force of decrees, and to be subject to appeal.

334. If the purchaser of any immoveable property sold in execution of a decree be resisted or obstructed by the judgment-debtor or any one on his behalf in obtaining possession of the property, the provisions of this chapter relating to resistance or obstruction to a decree-holder in obtaining possession of the property adjudged to him, shall be applicable.

Resisting or obstructing purchasers in obtaining possession of immoveable property.

335. If it appear that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned by any person other than the judgment-debtor, not in possession of the property sold, but claiming a right thereto as proprietor, mortgagee, lessee or under any other title, the Court, on the complaint of the purchaser, shall enquire into the matter of the resistance or obstruction, and pass such order thereon as it thinks fit.

Obstruction by claimant other than defendant.

The party against whom such order is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive.

I.—Of Arrest and Imprisonment.

336. A judgment-debtor may be arrested in execution of a decree at any hour and on any day, and shall as soon as practicable be brought before the Court, and his imprisonment may be in the civil jail of the district in which the Court ordering the imprisonment is situate, or, when such jail does not afford suitable accommodation, in any other place which the Local Government may appoint for the confinement of persons ordered to be imprisoned by the Courts of such district:

Place of judgment-debtor's imprisonment.

Provided that no house shall be entered after sunset and before sunrise for the purpose of making an arrest under this section:

Arrest in houses.

Provided also that when the decree in execution of which a judgment-debtor is arrested is a decree for money and the judgment-debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him.

Proviso.

The Local Government may, by notification published in the official Gazette, direct that whenever a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for money and brought before the Court under this section, the Court shall inform him that he may apply under chapter XX to be declared an insolvent, and that he will be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of his application and if he places all his property in possession of a receiver appointed by the Court.

If after such publication the judgment-debtor express his intention so to apply, and if he furnish sufficient security that he will appear when called upon, and that he will within one month apply under section 344 to be declared an insolvent, the Court shall release him from arrest:

But if he fails so to apply, the Court may either direct the security to be realised or commit him to jail in execution of the decree.

Warrant for arrest to direct judgment-debtor to be brought up.

337. Every warrant for the arrest of the judgment-debtor shall direct the officer entrusted with its execution to bring him before the Court with all convenient speed, unless the amount which he has been ordered to pay, together with the interest thereon and the costs, if any, to which he is liable, be sooner paid.

Scales of subsistence-allowances.

338. The Local Government may from time to time prescribe scales, graduated according to rank, race and nationality, of monthly allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment-debtors.

Judgment-debtor's subsistence-money.

339. No judgment-debtor shall be arrested in execution of a decree unless and until the decree-holder pays into court such sum as, having regard to the scales so fixed, the Judge thinks sufficient for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor from his arrest until he can be brought before the Court.

When a judgment-debtor is committed to jail in execution of a decree, the Court shall fix for his subsistence such monthly allowance as he may be entitled to according to the said scales, or where no such scales have been fixed, as it considers sufficient with reference to the class to which he belongs.

The monthly allowance fixed by the Court shall be supplied by the party on whose application the decree has been executed, to the proper officer of the Court by monthly payments in advance before the first day of each month.

The first payment shall be made for such portion of the current month as remains unexpired before the judgment-debtor is committed to jail.

Subsistence-money to be added to amount of decree.

340. Sums disbursed by the decree-holder for the subsistence of the judgment-debtor in jail shall be deemed to be costs on the suit:

Provided that the judgment-debtor shall not be detained in jail or arrested on account of any sum so disbursed.

Release of judgment-debtor.

341. The judgment-debtor shall be discharged from jail,

(a) on the decree being fully satisfied, or

(b) at the request of the person on whose application he has been imprisoned, or

(c) on such person omitting to pay the allowance as hereinbefore directed, or

(d) if the judgment-debtor be declared an insolvent, as hereinafter provided, or (e) when the term of his imprisonment as limited by section 342 is fulfilled:

Provided that in the first, second, third and fourth cases mentioned in this section, the judgment-debtor shall not be discharged without the order of the Court.

A judgment-debtor discharged under this section is not thereby discharged from his debt, but he cannot be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was imprisoned.

Imprisonment not to exceed six months.

342. No person shall be imprisoned in execution of a decree for a longer period than six months; or for a longer period than six weeks if the decree be for the payment of a sum of money not exceeding fifty rupees.

When not to exceed six weeks.

Endorsement on warrant.

343. The officer entrusted with the execution of the warrant shall endorse thereupon the day on, and the manner in, which it was executed; and if the latest day specified in the warrant for the return thereof has been exceeded, the reason of the delay; or if it was not executed, the reason why it was not executed, and shall return the warrant with such endorsement to the Court.

If the endorsement is to the effect that such officer is unable to execute the warrant, the Court shall examine him on oath touching his alleged inability, and may, if it think fit, summon and examine witnesses as to such inability and shall record the result.

CHAPTER XX.

OF INSOLVENT JUDGMENT-DEBTORS.

Power to apply to be declared an insolvent.

344. Any person arrested or imprisoned in execution of a decree for money may apply in writing to be declared an insolvent.

Such application shall be made to the District Court which ordered his arrest or imprisonment, or when the District Court did not make such order, then to the District Court to which the Court that made the order is subordinate.

Contents of application.

345. The application shall set forth—

(a) the fact of such person's arrest or imprisonment, the Court by whose order he was arrested or imprisoned, and the place in which he is in custody;

(b) the amount, kind and particulars of his property, and the value of any such property not consisting of money;

(c) the place or places in which such property is to be found;

(d) his willingness to put it at the disposal of the Court;

(e) the amount and particulars of all pecuniary claims against him; and (f) the names and residences of his creditors, so far as they are known to or can be ascertained by him.

Subscription and verification of application.

346. The application shall be subscribed and verified by the applicant in manner hereinbefore prescribed for subscribing and verifying plaints.

Service on decree-holder of copy of application and notice.

347. The Court shall fix a day for hearing the application, and shall cause a copy thereof, with a notice in writing of the time and place at which it will be heard, to be stuck up in Court and served at the applicant's expense on the holder of the decree in execution of which he was arrested or imprisoned, or on the pleader of such decree-holder, and on the other creditors (if any) mentioned in the application.

The Court may, if it thinks fit, publish at the applicant's expense the application in such official Gazettes and public newspapers as it thinks fit.

348. The Court may also, if it thinks fit, cause a like copy and notice to be served on any other person alleging himself to be a creditor of the applicant and applying for leave to be heard on the application.

Power to serve other creditors.

349. Where the applicant is under arrest, the Court may, pending the hearing under section 350, order him to be immediately committed to jail; or leave him in the custody of the officer to whom the service of the warrant was entrusted.

Powers of Court as to applicant under arrest.

350. On the day so fixed, or on any subsequent day to which the Court may adjourn the hearing, the Court shall examine the applicant, in the presence of the persons on whom such notice has been served or their pleaders, as to his then circumstances and as to his future means of payment, and shall hear the said decree-holder, the other creditors mentioned in the application and the other persons (if any) alleging themselves to be creditors, in opposition to the applicant's discharge; and may, if it thinks fit, grant time to the said decree-holder and other creditors or persons to adduce evidence showing that the applicant is not entitled to be declared an insolvent.

Procedure at hearing.

351. If the Court is satisfied—

Declaration of insolvency and appointment of receiver.

(a) that the statements in the application are substantially true;

(b) that the applicant has not, with intent to defraud his creditors, concealed, transferred or removed any part of his property since the institution of the suit in which was passed the decree in execution of which he was arrested or imprisoned or at any subsequent time;

(c) that he has not, knowing himself to be unable to pay his debts in full, recklessly contracted debts or given an unfair preference to any of his creditors by any payment or disposition of his property;

(d) that he has not committed any other act of bad faith regarding the matter of the application, the Court may declare him to be an insolvent, and may also, if it think fit, make an order appointing a receiver of his property, or if it does not appoint such receiver, may discharge the insolvent.

352. The creditors mentioned in the application and the other persons (if any) alleging themselves to be creditors of the insolvent, shall then produce evidence of the amount and particulars of their respective pecuniary claims against him; and the Court shall by order determine the persons who have proved themselves to be the insolvent's creditors and their respective debts; and shall frame a schedule of such persons and debts; and the declaration under section 351 shall be deemed to be a decree in favour of each of the said creditors for their said respective debts.

Creditors to prove their debts.

Schedule to be framed.

A copy of every such schedule shall be stuck up in the court-house.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to entitle a partner in an insolvent firm or, when he has died before the insolvency, his legal representative, to prove in competition with the creditors of the firm.

353. Any creditor of the insolvent who is not mentioned in such schedule may, within three months from its publication, apply to the Court for permission to produce evidence of the amount and particulars of his pecuniary claims against the insolvent, and in case the applicant proves himself to be a creditor of the insolvent, for an order directing his name to be inserted in the schedule as a creditor for the debt so proved.

Applications by creditors.

Any creditor mentioned in the schedule may within three months from the publication of the schedule apply to the Court for an order altering the schedule so far as regards the amount, nature, or particulars of his own debt, or to strike out the name of another creditor, or to alter the schedule so far as regards the amount, nature, or particulars of the debt of another creditor.

In the case of any application under this section, the Court, after causing such notices as it thinks fit to be served, at the applicant's expense, on the insolvent and the other creditors and hearing their objections, if any, may comply with or reject the application.

354. Every order under section 351 shall be published in the local official Gazette and shall operate to vest in the Receiver all the insolvent's property (except the particulars specified in the first proviso to section 266), whether set forth in his application or not.

Effect of order appointing Receiver.

355. The Receiver so appointed shall give such security as the Court may direct and shall possess himself of all such property, except as aforesaid; and on his certifying that the insolvent has placed him in possession thereof, or has done everything in his power for that purpose, the Court may discharge the insolvent from arrest or imprisonment, as the case may be, upon such conditions (if any) as the Court thinks fit.

Receiver to give security and collect assets.

Discharge of insolvent.

356. The Receiver shall proceed under the direction of the Court—

Duty of Receiver.

(a) to convert the property into money:

(b) to pay thereout debts, fines and penalties (if any) due by the insolvent to Government:

(c) to pay the said decree-holder's costs:

(d) to distribute the balance among the scheduled creditors rateably according to the amounts of their respective debts, and without any preference; and such Receiver may retain as a remuneration for the performance of his duties a commission, to be fixed by the Court, not exceeding the rate of five per centum upon the amount of the balance so distributed (the amount of the commission so retained being deemed a distribution), and shall deliver the surplus, if any, to the insolvent or his legal representative.

His right to remuneration.

Delivery of surplus.

357. An insolvent discharged under section 355 shall not be arrested or imprisoned on account of any of the scheduled debts. But (subject to the provisions of section 358) his property, whether previously or subsequently acquired (except the particulars specified in the first proviso to section 266 and except the property vested in the Receiver), shall, by order of the Court, be liable to attachment and sale until the decrees against him held by the scheduled creditors are fully satisfied or become incapable of being executed.

When Court may declare insolvent absolved from further liability.

358. If the aggregate amount of the scheduled debts is two hundred rupees or a less sum, the Court may declare the insolvent discharged as aforesaid absolved from further liability in respect of such debts.

Procedure in case of dishonest applicant.

359. Whenever, at the hearing under section 350, it is proved that the applicant has

(a) been guilty, in his application, of any concealment or of wilfully making any false statement as to the debts due by him, or respecting the property belonging to him, whether in possession or in expectancy, or held for him in trust;

(b) fraudulently concealed, transferred or removed any property; or

(c) committed any other act of bad faith regarding the matter of the application, the Court shall, at the instance of any of his creditors, sentence him to imprisonment for a term which may extend to one year from the date of committal.

Or the Court may, if it think fit, send him to the Magistrate to be dealt with according to law.

Investment of other Courts with powers of District Courts.

Transfer of cases.

360. The Local Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, invest any Court other than a District Court with the powers conferred on District Courts by sections 344 to 359 (both inclusive), and the District Judge may transfer to any Court situate in his district and so invested any case instituted under section 344.

Any Court so invested may entertain any application under section 344 by any person arrested in execution of a decree of such Court.

PART II.

OF INCIDENTAL PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER XXI.

OF THE DEATH, MARRIAGE AND INSOLVENCY OF PARTIES.

No abatement by party's death, if cause of action survive.

361. The death of a plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate if the cause of action survives.

Illustrations.

(a) A covenants with B and C to pay an annuity to B during C's life. B and C sue A to compel payment. B dies before the decree: the cause of action survives to C, and the suit does not abate.

(b) In the same case, all the parties die before decree. The cause of action survives to the representative of the survivor of B and C, and he may continue the suit against A's representative.

(c) A sues B for libel. A dies. The cause of action does not survive and the suit abates.

(d) A, a member of a Hindú joint family under the Mitákshará law, institutes a suit for partition of the family property. A dies leaving B, a minor son, his heir. The cause of action survives to B, and the suit does not abate.

Proceeding in case of death of one of several plaintiffs or defendants, if cause of action survive.

362. If there be more plaintiffs or defendants than one, and any of them dies, and if the cause of action survives to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, or against the surviving defendant or defendants alone, the Court shall cause an entry to that effect to be made on the record, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs, or against the surviving defendant or defendants.

Proceeding in case of death of one of several plaintiffs where cause of action survives to survivors and representative of deceased.

363. If there be more plaintiffs than one, and any of them dies, and if the cause of action does not survive to the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs alone, but survives to him or them and the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff jointly, the Court may, on the application of such legal representative, enter his name on the record in the place of such deceased plaintiff, and the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs and such legal representative.

Proceeding where no application made by representative of deceased plaintiff.

364. If no application be made to the Court by any person claiming to be the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the suit shall proceed at the instance of the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs; and the legal representative (if any) of the deceased plaintiff shall be made a party and shall be interested in and bound by the decree passed in the suit, in the same manner as if the suit had proceeded at his instance conjointly with the surviving plaintiff or plaintiffs.

Proceeding in case of death of sole, or sole surviving, plaintiff.

365. In case of the death of a sole plaintiff or sole surviving plaintiff, the Court may, where the cause of action survives, on the application of the legal representative of the deceased, enter his name in the place of such plaintiff on the record, and the suit shall thereupon proceed.

Abatement where no application by representative of deceased plaintiff.

366. If no such application be made to the Court by any person claiming to be the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, the Court may pass an order that the suit shall abate, and award to the defendant the costs which he may have incurred in defending the suit, to be recovered from the estate of the deceased plaintiff; or the Court may, if it think proper, on the application of the defendant, and upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit, pass such other order as it thinks fit for bringing in the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, or for proceeding with the suit in order to a final determination of the matter in dispute, or for both those purposes.

Explanation.—A certificate of heirship, or a certificate to collect debts, does not of itself constitute the person holding it the legal representative of the deceased. But when the person holding any such certificate obtains thereby property belonging to the deceased, he may be treated as a legal representative liable in respect of such property.

367. If any dispute arise as to who is the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff, the Court may either stay the suit until the fact has been determined in another suit, or decide at or before the hearing of the suit who shall be admitted to be such legal representative for the purpose of prosecuting the suit.

Procedure in case of dispute as to representative of deceased plaintiff.

368. If there be more defendants than one, and any of them die before decree and the cause of action does not survive against the surviving defendant or defendants alone,

Procedure in case of death of one of several defendants, or of sole or sole surviving defendant.

and also in case of the death of a sole defendant, or sole surviving defendant, where the right to sue survives, the plaintiff may make an application to the Court, specifying the name, description and place of abode of any person whom he alleges to be the legal representative of the deceased defendant, and whom he desires to be made the defendant in his stead.

The Court shall thereupon enter the name of such representative on the record in the place of such defendant, and shall issue a summons to such representative to appear on a day to be therein mentioned to defend the suit; and the case shall thereupon proceed in the same manner as if such representative had originally been made a defendant and had been a party to the former proceedings in the suit:

Provided that the person so made defendant may object that he is not the legal representative of the deceased defendant, or may make any defence appropriate to his character as such representative.

369. The marriage of a female plaintiff or defendant shall not cause the suit to abate, but the suit may notwithstanding be proceeded with to judgment, and where the decree is against a female defendant, it may thereupon be executed against her alone.

Suit not abated by marriage of female party.

If the case is one in which the husband is by law liable for the debts of his wife, the decree may, with the permission of the Court, be executed against the husband also; and in case of judgment for the wife, execution of the decree may with such permission be issued upon the application of the husband, where the husband is by law entitled to the subject-matter of the decree.

370. The bankruptcy or insolvency of a plaintiff in any suit which his assignee or the receiver appointed under section 351 might maintain for the benefit of his creditors shall not bar the suit, unless such assignee or receiver declines to continue the suit and to give security for the costs thereof within such time as the Court may order.

When plaintiff's bankruptcy or insolvency bars suit.

If the assignee or receiver neglect or refuse to continue the suit and to give such security within the time so ordered, the defendant may apply for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the plaintiff's bankruptcy or insolvency, and the Court may dismiss the suit and award to the defendant the costs which he has incurred in defending the same, to be proved as a debt against the plaintiff's estate.

Procedure when assignee fails to continue suit or give security.

371. When a suit abates or is dismissed under this chapter, no fresh suit shall be brought on the same cause of action.

Effect of abatement on parties' rights.

But the person claiming to be the legal representative of the deceased bankrupt or insolvent plaintiff, may apply for an order to set aside the order for abatement or dismissal; and if it be proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, the Court shall set aside the abatement or dismissal upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.

Application to set aside abatement or dismissal.

372. In other cases of assignment, creation or devolution of any interest pending the suit, the suit may, with the leave of the Court, given either with the consent of all parties or after service of notice in writing upon them, and hearing their objections, if any, be continued by or against the person to whom such interest has come, either in addition to or in substitution for the person from whom it has passed, as the case may require.

Procedure in case of assignment pending the suit.

CHAPTER XXII.

OF THE WITHDRAWAL AND ADJUSTMENT OF SUITS.

373. If, at any time after the institution of the suit, the Court is satisfied on the application of the plaintiff (a) that the suit must fail by reason of some formal defect, or (b) that there are sufficient grounds for permitting him to withdraw from the suit or to abandon part of his claim with liberty to bring a fresh suit for the subject-matter of the suit or for the part so abandoned, the Court may grant such permission on such terms as to costs or otherwise as it thinks fit.

Power to allow plaintiff to withdraw with liberty to bring fresh suit.

If the plaintiff withdraw from the suit, or abandon part of his claim, without such permission, he shall be liable for such costs as the Court may award, and shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit for the same matter.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorize the Court to permit one of several plaintiffs to withdraw without the consent of the others.

374. In any fresh suit instituted on permission granted under the last preceding section, the plaintiff shall be bound by the law of limitation in the same manner as if the first suit had not been brought.

Limitation-law not affected by first suit.

375. If a suit be adjusted by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the matter of the suit, such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final.

Compromise of suits.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF PAYMENT INTO COURT.

Deposit by defendant of amount in satisfaction of claim.

376. The defendant in any suit to recover a debt or damages, may, at any stage of the suit, deposit in Court such sum of money as he considers a satisfaction in full of the claim.

Notice of deposit.

377. Notice of the deposit shall be given by the defendant to the plaintiff, and the amount of the deposit shall (unless the Court otherwise directs) be paid to the plaintiff on his application.

Interest on sum deposited not allowed to plaintiff after receipt of notice.

378. No interest shall be allowed to the plaintiff on any sum deposited by the defendant from the date of the receipt of such notice, whether the sum deposited be in full of the claim or fall short thereof.

Procedure where plaintiff accepts deposit as satisfaction in part.

379. If the plaintiff accept such amount only as satisfaction in part of his claim, he may prosecute his suit for the balance; and if the Court decides that the deposit by the defendant was a full satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim, the plaintiff must pay the costs of the suit incurred after the deposit and the costs incurred previous thereto, so far as they were caused by excess in the plaintiff's claim.

Procedure where he accepts it as satisfaction in full.

If the plaintiff accept such amount as satisfaction in full of his claim, he shall present to the Court a statement to that effect, and such statement shall be filed and the Court shall pass judgment accordingly, and in directing by whom the costs of each party are to be paid, the Court shall consider which of the parties is most to blame for the litigation.

Illustrations.

(a) A owes B Rs. 100. B sues A for the amount, having made no demand for payment and having no reason to believe that the delay caused by making a demand would place him at a disadvantage. On the plaint being filed, A pays the money into Court. B accepts it in full satisfaction of his claim, but the Court should not allow him any costs, the litigation being presumably groundless on his part.

(b) B sues A under the circumstances mentioned in illustration (a). On the plaint being filed, A disputes the claim. Afterwards A pays the money into Court. B accepts it in full satisfaction of his claim. The Court should also give B his costs of suit, A's conduct having shown that the litigation was necessary.

(c) A owes B Rs. 100 and is willing to pay him that sum without suit. B claims Rs. 150 and sues A for that amount. On the plaint being filed, A pays Rs. 100 into Court and disputes only his liability to pay the remaining Rs. 50. B accepts the Rs. 100 in full satisfaction of his claim. The Court should order him to pay A's costs.

CHAPTER XXIV.

OF REQUIRING SECURITY FOR COSTS.

When security for costs may be required from plaintiff at any stage of suit.

380. If, at the institution or at any subsequent stage of a suit, it appears to the Court that a sole plaintiff is, or (when there are more plaintiffs than one) that all the plaintiffs are, residing out of British India, and that such plaintiff does not, or that no one of such plaintiffs does, possess any sufficient immoveable property within British India independent of the property in suit, the Court may, either of its own motion or on the application of any defendant, order the plaintiff or plaintiffs, within a time to be fixed by the order, to give security for the payment of all costs incurred and likely to be incurred by any defendant.

Procedure where requisition is not complied with.

381. In the event of such security not being furnished within the time so fixed, the Court shall dismiss the suit unless the plaintiff or plaintiffs be permitted to withdraw therefrom under the provisions of section 373.

Residence out of British India.

382. Whoever leaves British India under such circumstances as to afford reasonable probability that he will not be forthcoming whenever he may be called upon to pay costs shall be deemed to be residing out of British India, within the meaning of section 380.

CHAPTER XXV.

OF COMMISSIONS.

A.—Commissions to examine Witnesses.

Cases in which Court may issue commission to examine witness.

383. Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination on interrogatories or otherwise of persons resident within the local limits of its jurisdiction, who are exempted under this Code from attending the Court, or who are from sickness or infirmity unable to attend it.

Order for commission may be made either on application of parties or by Court of its own accord.

384. Such order may be made by the Court either of its own motion, or on the application, supported by affidavit, of any party to the suit or of the witness to be examined.

When witness resides within Court's jurisdiction.

385. The commission for the examination of a person who resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the same, may be issued to any person whom the Court thinks fit to execute the same.

When witness resides beyond Court's jurisdiction, but in British India.

386. Any Court may in any suit issue a commission for the examination of—

(a) any person resident beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction;

(b) persons who are about to leave such limits before the date on which they are required to be examined in Court; and

(c) civil and military officers of Government who cannot, in the opinion of the Judge, attend the Court without detriment to the public service.

Such commission shall ordinarily be issued to any Court not being a High Court, within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person resides, and which can most conveniently execute the same:

When witness is within local limits of ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court.

Provided that if he resides beyond the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court issuing the commission and within the towns of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, the commission shall be issued to the Court of Small Causes within whose jurisdiction he resides:

Provided also that, under special circumstances, the commission may be directed to any person whom the Court issuing the commission thinks fit to appoint.

The Court on issuing any commission under this section shall direct whether the commission shall be returned to itself or to any subordinate Court.

When witness is not within British India.

387. When any Court to which application is made for the issue of a commission for the examination of a person residing at any place not within British India is satisfied that his evidence is necessary, the Court may issue such commission.

Court to examine witness pursuant to commission.

388. Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person shall examine him pursuant thereto.

Commission when executed to be returned to Court issuing it with depositions of witnesses.

389. After the commission has been duly executed, it shall be returned, together with the evidence taken under it, to the Court out of which it issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order; and the commission and the return thereto, and the evidence taken under it, shall (subject to the provisions of the next following section) form part of the record of the suit.

When depositions may be read in evidence.

390. Evidence taken under a commission shall not be read as evidence in the suit without the consent of the party against whom the same is offered, unless

(a) the person who gave the evidence is beyond the jurisdiction of the Court, or dead, or unable from sickness or infirmity to attend to be personally examined, or exempted from personal appearance in Court, or

(b) the Court in its discretion dispenses with the proof of any of the circumstances mentioned in the last preceding clause, and authorizes the evidence of any person being read as evidence in the suit, notwithstanding proof that the cause for taking such evidence by commission has ceased at the time of reading the same.

Provisions as to execution and return of commissions to apply to commissions issued by foreign Courts.

391. The provisions hereinbefore contained as to the execution and return of commissions shall apply to commissions issued by

(a) Courts situate beyond the limits of British India and established by the authority of Her Majesty or of the Governor General in Council, or

(b) Courts situate in any part of the British Empire other than British India, or (c) Courts of any foreign country for the time being in alliance with Her Majesty.

B.—Commissions for local Investigations.

Commission to make local investigations.

392. In any suit or proceeding in which the Court deems a local investigation to be requisite or proper for the purpose of elucidating any matter in dispute, or of ascertaining the market-value of any property, or the amount of any mesne profits or damages or annual nett profits, and the same cannot be conveniently conducted by the Judge in person, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit, directing him to make such investigation and to report thereon to the Court:

Provided that, when the Local Government has made rules as to the persons to whom such commission shall be issued, the Court shall be bound by such rules.

Procedure of Commissioner.

393. The Commissioner, after such local inspection as he deems necessary, and after reducing to writing the evidence taken by him, shall return such evidence, together with his report in writing, subscribed with his name, to the Court.

Report and depositions to be evidence in suit.

The report of the Commissioner and the evidence taken by him (but not the evidence without the report) shall be evidence in the suit and shall form part of the record; but the Court, or any of the parties to the suit may, with the permission of the Court, examine the Commissioner personally in open Court touching any of the matters referred to him or mentioned in his report, or as to the manner in which he has made the investigation.

Commissioner may be examined in person.

C.—Commissions to examine Accounts.

Commission to examine or adjust accounts.

394. In any suit in which an examination or adjustment of accounts is necessary, the Court may issue a commission to such person as it thinks fit directing him to make such examination or adjustment.

Court to give Commissioner necessary instructions.

395. The Court shall furnish the Commissioner with such part of the proceedings and such detailed instructions as appear necessary, and the instructions shall distinctly specify whether the Commissioner is merely to transmit the proceedings which he may hold on the inquiry, or also to report his own opinion on the point referred for his examination.

Proceedings of Commissioner receivable in evidence.

Power to make further inquiry.

The proceedings of the Commissioner shall be received in evidence in the suit, unless the Court has reason to be dissatisfied with them, in which case the Court shall direct such further inquiry as is requisite.

D.—Commission to make Partition.

Commission to make partition of non-revenue-paying immoveable property.

396. In any suit in which the partition of immoveable property not paying revenue to Government appears to the Court to be necessary, the Court, after ascertaining the several parties interested in such property and their several rights therein, may issue a commission to such persons as it thinks fit to make a partition according to such rights.

The Commissioners shall ascertain and inspect the property, and shall divide the same into as many shares as may be directed by the order under which the commission issues, and shall allot such shares to the parties, and may, if authorized thereto by the said order, award sums to be paid for the purpose of equalizing the value of the shares.

The Commissioners shall then prepare and sign a report, or (if they cannot agree) separate reports, appointing the share of each party, and distinguishing each share (if so directed by the said order) by metes and bounds. Such report or reports shall be annexed to the commission and transmitted to the Court: and the Court, after hearing any objections which the parties may make to the report or reports shall either quash the same and issue a new commission, or (where the Commissioners agree in their report) pass a decree in accordance therewith.

E.—General Provisions.

404. Notwithstanding anything contained in section 36, the application shall be presented to the Court by the applicant in person unless he is exempted from appearing in Court under section 640 or 641, in which case the application may be presented by a duly authorized agent, who can answer all material questions relating to the application, and who may be examined in the same manner as the party represented by him might have been examined had such party attended in person.

413. Refusal to allow the applicant to sue as a pauper shall be a bar to any subsequent application of the like nature by him in respect of the same right to sue; but the applicant shall be at liberty to institute a suit in the ordinary manner in respect of such right, provided that he first pays the costs (if any) incurred by Government in opposing his application for leave to sue as a pauper.

470. When two or more persons claim adversely to one another the same payment or property from another person, whose only interest therein is that of a mere stakeholder and who is ready to render it to the right owner, such stakeholder may institute a suit of interpleader against all the claimants for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to whom the payment or property should be made or delivered, and of obtaining indemnity for himself:

When interpleader-suit may be instituted.

Provided that if any suit is pending in which the rights of all parties can properly be decided, the stakeholder shall not institute a suit of interpleader.

and, if it finds that the admissions of the parties or other evidence enable it,

(c) adjudicate the title to the thing claimed; or else it may

(d) direct the defendants to interplead one another by filing statements and entering into evidence for the purpose of bringing their respective claims before the Court.

When agents and tenants may institute interpleader-suits.

474. Nothing in this chapter shall be taken to enable agents to sue their principals, or tenants to sue their landlords, for the purpose of compelling them to interplead with any persons other than persons making claim through such principals or landlords.

Illustrations.

(a) A deposits a box of jewels with B as his agent. C alleges that the jewels were wrongfully obtained from him by A, and claims them from B. B cannot institute an interpleader-suit against A and C.

(b) A deposits a box of jewels with B as his agent. He then writes to C for the purpose of making the jewels a security for a debt due from himself to C. A afterwards alleges that C's debt is satisfied, and C alleges the contrary. Both claim the jewels from B. B may institute an interpleader-suit against A and C.

475. When the suit is properly instituted, the Court may provide for the plaintiff's costs by giving him a charge on the thing claimed or in some other effectual way.

Procedure where a defendant is suing stakeholder.

476. If any of the defendants in an interpleader-suit is actually suing the stakeholder in respect of the subject of such suit, the Court in which the suit against the stakeholder is pending shall, on being duly informed by the Court which passed the decree in the interpleader-suit in favour of the stakeholder, that such decree has been passed, stay the proceedings as against him; and his costs in the suit so stayed may be provided for in such suit; but if, and so far as, they are not provided for in that suit, they may be added to his costs incurred in the interpleader-suit.

Costs.

PART IV.

PROVISIONAL REMEDIES.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

OF ARREST AND ATTACHMENT BEFORE JUDGMENT.

A.—Arrest before Judgment.

When plaintiff may apply that security be taken.

477. If at any stage of any suit, other than a suit for the possession of immoveable property, the plaintiff satisfies the Court by affidavit—that the defendant, with intent to avoid or delay the plaintiff, or to avoid any process of the Court, or to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,

(a) has absconded or left the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(b) is about to abscond or to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(c) has disposed of or removed from the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof, or that the defendant is about to leave British India under circumstances affording reasonable probability that the plaintiff will or may thereby be obstructed or delayed in the execution of any decree that may be passed against the defendant in the suit, the plaintiff may apply to the Court that security be taken for the appearance of the defendant to answer any decree that may be passed against him in the suit.

Order to bring up defendant to show cause why he should not give security.

478. If the Court, after examining the applicant, and making such further investigation as it thinks fit, is satisfied that the defendant, with any such intent as aforesaid,

(a) has absconded or left the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(b) is about to abscond or to leave the jurisdiction of the Court, or

(c) has disposed of or removed from the jurisdiction of the Court his property or any part thereof, or that the defendant is about to leave British India under the circumstances last aforesaid, the Court may issue an order for bringing the defendant before the Court to show cause why he should not give security for his appearance.

If defendant fail to show cause, Court may order him to make deposit or give security.

479. If the defendant fail to show such cause, the Court shall order him either to deposit in court money or other property sufficient to answer the claim against him, or to give security for his appearance at any time when called upon while the suit is pending, and until execution or satisfaction of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit.

The surety shall bind himself, in default of such appearance, to pay any sum of money which the defendant may be ordered to pay in the suit.

Procedure in case of application by surety to be discharged.

480. The surety for the appearance of the defendant may at any time apply to the Court in which he became such surety to be discharged from his obligation.

On such application being made, the Court shall summon the defendant to appear, or, if it thinks fit, may issue a warrant for his arrest in the first instance.

On the appearance of the defendant pursuant to the summons or warrant, or on his voluntary surrender, the Court shall direct the surety to be discharged from his obligation, and shall call upon the defendant to find fresh security.

Procedure where defendant fails to give security or find fresh security.

481. If the defendant fail to comply with any order under section 479 or section 480, the Court may commit him to jail until the decision of the suit, or, if judgment be given against the defendant, until the execution of the decree: Provided that no person shall be imprisoned under this section in any case for a longer period than six months, nor for a longer period than six weeks when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed fifty rupees.

Subsistence of defendant arrested.

482. The provisions of section 339 as to allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment-debtors shall apply to all defendants arrested under this chapter.

B.—Attachment before Judgment.

Application before judgment for security from defendant to satisfy decree, and in default, for attachment of property.

483. If at any stage of any suit the plaintiff satisfies the Court by affidavit that the defendant, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him,

(a) is about to dispose of the whole or any part of his property, or to remove the same from the jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is pending, or

(b) has quitted the jurisdiction of the Court, leaving therein property belonging to him, the plaintiff may apply to the Court to call upon the defendant to furnish security to satisfy any decree that may be passed against him in such suit, and, on his failing to give such security, to direct that any portion of his property shall be attached until the further order of the Court.

Contents of application.

The application shall, unless the Court otherwise directs, specify the property required to be attached and the estimated value thereof.

Court may call on defendant to furnish security or show cause.

484. If the Court, after examining the applicant, and making any further investigation which it thinks fit, is satisfied that the defendant is about to dispose of or remove his property, with intent to obstruct or delay the execution of any decree that may be passed against him in the suit, the Court may require him, within a time to be fixed by the Court, either to furnish security in such sum as may be specified in the order, to produce and place at the disposal of the Court, when required, the said property or the value of the same, or such portion thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree, or to appear and show cause why he should not furnish security.

The Court may also in the order direct the conditional attachment of the whole or any portion of the property specified in the application.

Attachment if cause not shown or security not furnished.

485. If the defendant fail to show cause why he should not furnish security, or fail to furnish the security required within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may order that the property specified in the application, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, shall be attached.

Withdrawal of attachment.

If the defendant show such cause or furnish the required security, and the property specified in the application or any portion of it has been attached, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn.

Mode of making attachment.

486. The attachment shall be made in the manner herein provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree for money.

Investigation of claims to property attached before judgment.

487. If any claim be preferred to the property attached before judgment, such claim shall be investigated in the manner hereinbefore provided for the investigation of claims to property attached in execution of a decree for money.

Removal of attachment when security furnished.

488. When an order of attachment before judgment is passed, the Court which passed the order shall remove the attachment whenever the defendant furnishes the security required, together with security for the costs of the attachment, or when the suit is dismissed.

Attachment not to affect rights of strangers, or bar the decree-holder from applying for sale.

489. Attachment before judgment shall not affect the rights, existing prior to the attachment, of persons not parties to the suit, nor bar any person holding a decree against the defendant from applying for the sale of the property under attachment in execution of such decree.

Property attached under this chapter, not to be re-attached in execution of decree.

490. Where property is under attachment by virtue of the provisions of this chapter, and a decree is given in favour of the plaintiff, it shall not be necessary to re-attach the property in execution of such decree.

C.—Compensation for improper Arrests or Attachments.

Compensation for obtaining arrest or attachment on insufficient grounds.

491. If in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected, it appear to the Court that such arrest or attachment was applied for on insufficient grounds, or if the suit of the plaintiff fails, and it appears to the Court that there was no probable ground for instituting the suit, the Court may, on the application of the defendant, award against the plaintiff in its decree such amount, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him by the arrest or attachment:

Proviso.

Provided that the Court shall not award under this section a larger amount than it might decree in a suit for compensation.

An award under this section shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest or attachment.

CHAPTER XXXV.

OF TEMPORARY INJUNCTIONS AND INTERLOCUTORY ORDERS.

A.—Temporary Injunctions.

Cases in which temporary injunction may be granted.

492. If in any suit it be proved by affidavit or otherwise

(a) that any property in dispute in a suit is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated by any party to the suit, or wrongfully sold in execution of a decree, or

(b) that the defendant threatens, or is about to remove or dispose of his property with intent to defraud his creditors, the Court may by order grant a temporary injunction to restrain such act, or give such other order for the purpose of staying and preventing the wasting, damaging, alienation, sale, removal or disposition of the property as the Court thinks fit, or refuse such injunction or other order.

Injunction to restrain repetition or continuance of breach.

493. In any suit for restraining the defendant from committing a breach of contract or other injury, whether compensation be claimed in the suit or not, the plaintiff may, at any time after the commencement of the suit, and either before or after judgment, apply to the Court for a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right.

The Court may by order grant such injunction on such terms as to the duration of the injunction, keeping an account, giving security, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit, or refuse the same.

In case of disobedience, an injunction granted under this section or section 492 may be enforced by the imprisonment of the defendant for a term not exceeding six months, or the attachment of his property, or both.

No attachment under this section shall remain in force for more than one year, at the end of which time if the defendant has not obeyed the injunction, the property attached may be sold, and out of the proceeds the Court may award to the plaintiff such compensation as it thinks fit and may pay the balance, if any, to the defendant.

Before granting injunction, Court may direct notice to be given to opposite party.

494. The Court shall in all cases, except where it appear that the object of granting the injunction would be defeated by the delay, before granting an injunction, direct notice of the application for the same to be given to the opposite party.

Injunction to corporation binding on its members and officers.

495. An injunction directed to a corporation or public company is binding not only on the corporation or company itself, but also on all members and officers of the corporation or company whose personal action it seeks to restrain.

Order for injunction may be discharged, varied or set aside.

496. Any order for an injunction may be discharged, or varied, or set aside by the Court, on application made thereto by any party dissatisfied with such order.

Compensation to defendant for issue of injunction on insufficient grounds.

497. If it appears to the Court that the injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or if, after the issue of the injunction, the suit is dismissed or judgment is given against the plaintiff by default or otherwise, and it appears to the Court that there was no probable ground for instituting the suit, the Court may, on the application of the defendant, award against the plaintiff in its decree such sum, not exceeding one thousand rupees, as it deems a reasonable compensation to the defendant for the expense or injury caused to him by the issue of the injunction:

Proviso.

Provided that the Court shall not award under this section a larger amount than it might decree in a suit for compensation.

An award under this section shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of the issue of the injunction.

B.—Interlocutory Orders.

Power to order interim sale of perishable articles.

498. The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, order the sale, by any person named in such order, and in such manner and on such terms as it thinks fit, of any moveable property being the subject of such suit, which is subject to speedy and natural decay.

Power to make order for detention, &c., of subject-matter and to authorize entry, taking of samples and experiments.

499. The Court may, on the application of any party to a suit, and on such terms as it thinks fit,

(a) make an order for the detention, preservation or inspection of any property being the subject of such suit;

(b) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, authorize any person to enter upon or into any land or building in the possession of any other party to such suit, and

(c) for all or any of the purposes aforesaid, authorize any samples to be taken, or any observation to be made or experiment to be tried, which may seem necessary or expedient for the purpose of obtaining full information or evidence.

The provisions hereinbefore contained as to execution of process shall apply, mutatis mutandis, to persons authorized to enter under this section.

Application for such orders to be after notice.

500. An application by the plaintiff for an order under section 498 or section 499 may be made after notice in writing to the defendant at any time after service of the summons.

An application by the defendant for a like order may be made after notice in writing to the plaintiff, and at any time after the applicant has appeared.

When party may be put in immediate possession of land, the subject of suit.

501. When land paying revenue to Government, or a tenure liable to sale, is the subject of a suit, if the party in possession of such land or tenure neglects to pay the Government revenue, or the rent due to the proprietor of the tenure, as the case may be, and such land or tenure is consequently ordered to be sold, any other party to the suit claiming to have an interest in such land or tenure may upon payment of the revenue or rent due previously to the sale (and with or without security at the discretion of the Court), be put in immediate possession of the land or tenure; and the Court in its decree may award against the defaulter the amount so paid, with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court thinks fit, or may charge the amount so paid, with interest thereupon at such rate as the Court orders, in any adjustment of accounts which may be directed in the decree passed in the suit.

Deposit of money, &c., in Court.

502. When the subject-matter of a suit is money or some other thing capable of delivery, and any party thereto admits that he holds such money or other thing as a trustee for another party, or that it belongs or is due to another party, the Court may order the same to be deposited in court or delivered to such last-named party, with or without security, subject to the further direction of the Court.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS.

Power of Court to appoint receivers.

503. Whenever it appears to the Court to be necessary for the realization, preservation or better custody or management of any property, moveable or immoveable, the subject of a suit, or under attachment, the Court may by order and, if need be,

(a) appoint a receiver of such property,

(b) remove the person in whose possession or custody the property may be from the possession or custody thereof;

(c) commit the same to the custody or management of such receiver; and

(d) grant to such receiver such fee or commission on the rents and profits of the property by way of remuneration, and all such powers as to bringing and defending suits, and for the realization, management, protection, preservation and improvement of the property, the collection of the rents and profits thereof, the application and disposal of such rents and profits, and the execution of instruments in writing, as the owner himself has, or such of those powers as the Court thinks fit.

Receiver's liabilities.

Every receiver so appointed shall

(e) give such security (if any) as the Court thinks fit duly to account for what he shall receive in respect of the property,

(f) pass his accounts at such periods and in such form as the Court directs,

(g) pay the balance due from him thereon as the Court directs, and (h) be responsible for any loss occasioned to the property by his wilful default or gross negligence.

Nothing in this section authorizes the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property under attachment any person whom the parties to the suit, or some or one of them, have or has not a present right so to remove.

When Collector may be appointed receiver.

504. If the property be land paying revenue to Government, or land of which the revenue has been assigned or redeemed, and the Court considers that the interests of those concerned will be promoted by the management of the Collector, the Court may appoint the Collector to be receiver of such property.

Courts empowered under this chapter.

505. The powers conferred by this chapter shall be exercised only by High Courts and District Courts. Provided that whenever the Judge of a Court subordinate to a District Court considers it expedient that a receiver should be appointed in any suit before him, he shall nominate such person as he considers fit for such appointment, and submit such person's name, with the grounds for the nomination, to the District Court, and the District Court shall authorize such Judge to appoint the person so nominated or pass such other order as it thinks fit.

PART V.

OF SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

REFERENCE TO ARBITRATION.

Parties to suit may apply for order of reference.

506. If all the parties to a suit desire that any matter in difference between them in the suit be referred to arbitration, they may, at any time before judgment is pronounced, apply, in person or by their respective pleaders specially authorized in writing in this behalf, to the Court for an order of reference.

Every such application shall be in writing and shall state the particular matter sought to be referred.

Nomination of arbitrator.

507. The arbitrator shall be nominated by the parties in such manner as may be agreed upon between them.

When Court to nominate arbitrator.

If the parties cannot agree with respect to such nomination, or if the person whom they nominate refuses to accept the arbitration and the parties desire that the nomination shall be made by the Court, the Court shall nominate the arbitrator.

Order of reference.

508. The Court shall, by order, refer to the arbitrator the matter in difference which he is required to determine, and shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the delivery of the award, and specify such time in the order.

When once a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not deal with it in the same suit, except as hereinafter provided.

When reference is to two or more, order to provide for difference of opinion.

509. If the reference be to two or more arbitrators, provision shall be made in the order for a difference of opinion among the arbitrators,

(a) by the appointment of an umpire, or

(b) by declaring that the decision shall be with the majority if the major part of the arbitrators agree, or

(c) by empowering the arbitrators to appoint an umpire, or

(d) otherwise, as may be agreed between the parties; or, if they cannot agree, as the Court determines.

If an umpire is appointed, the Court shall fix such time as it thinks reasonable for the delivery of his award in case he is required to act.

Death, incapacity, &c., of arbitrators or umpire.

510. If the arbitrator, or, where there are more arbitrators than one, any of the arbitrators, or the umpire, dies, or refuses, or neglects, or becomes incapable to act, or leaves British India under circumstances showing that he will probably not return at an early date, the Court may in its discretion either appoint a new arbitrator or umpire in the place of the person so dying, or refusing, or neglecting, or becoming incapable to act, or leaving British India, or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit.

Appointment of umpire by Court.

511. Where the arbitrators are empowered by the order of reference to appoint an umpire and fail to do so, any of the parties may serve the arbitrators with a written notice to appoint an umpire; and if, within seven days after such notice has been served, or such further time as the Court may in each case allow, no umpire be appointed, the Court, upon the application of the party who has served such notice as aforesaid, may appoint an umpire.

Powers of arbitrator or umpire appointed under sections 509, 510, 511.

512. Every arbitrator or umpire appointed under section 509, 510 or 511 shall have the like powers as if his name had been inserted in the order of reference.

Summoning witnesses.

513. The Court shall issue the same processes to the parties and witnesses whom the arbitrators or umpire desire to examine, as the Court may issue in suits tried before it.

Persons not attending in accordance with such process, or making any other default, or refusing to give their evidence, or guilty of any contempt to the arbitrator or umpire during the investigation of the matters referred, shall be subject to the like disadvantages, penalties and punishments by order of the Court on the representation of the arbitrator or umpire, as they would incur for the like offences in suits tried before the Court.

Punishment for default, &c.

Extension of time for making award.

514. If from the want of the necessary evidence or information, or from any other cause, the arbitrators cannot complete the award within the period specified in the order, the Court may, if it think fit, either grant a further time, and from time to time enlarge the period for the delivery of the award, or make an order superseding the arbitration, and in such case shall proceed with the suit.

When umpire may arbitrate in lieu of arbitrators.

515. When an umpire has been appointed, he may enter on the reference in the place of the arbitrators

(a) if they have allowed the appointed time to expire without making an award, or

(b) when they have delivered to the Court or to the umpire a notice in writing, stating that they cannot agree.

Award to be signed and filed.

516. When an award in a suit has been made, the persons who made it shall sign it and cause it to be filed in Court, together with any depositions and documents which have been taken and proved before them; and notice of the filing shall be given to the parties.

Arbitrators or umpire may state special case.

517. Upon any reference by an order of Court, the arbitrators or umpire may, with the consent of the Court, state the award as to the whole or any part thereof in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court; and the Court shall deliver its opinion thereon; and such opinion shall be added to and form part of the award.

Court may, on application, modify or correct award in certain cases.

518. The Court may, by order, modify or correct an award,

(a) where it appears that a part of the award is upon a matter not referred to arbitration, provided such part can be separated from the other part and does not affect the decision on the matter referred, or

(b) where the award is imperfect in form, or contains any obvious error which can be amended without affecting such decision.

Order as to costs of arbitration.

519. The Court may also make such order as it thinks fit respecting the costs of the arbitration, if any question arise respecting such costs and the award contain no sufficient provision concerning them.

When award or matter referred to arbitration may be remitted.

520. The Court may remit the award or any matter referred to arbitration to the reconsideration of the same arbitrators or umpire, upon such terms as it thinks fit,

(a) where the award has left undetermined any of the matters referred to arbitration, or where it determines any matter not referred to arbitration;

(b) where the award is so indefinite as to be incapable of execution;

(c) where an objection to the legality of the award is apparent upon the face of it.

Grounds for setting aside award.

521. An award remitted under section 520 becomes void on the refusal of the arbitrators or umpire to reconsider it. But no award shall be set aside except on one of the following grounds (namely)—

(a) corruption or misconduct of the arbitrator or umpire;

(b) either party having been guilty of fraudulent concealment of any matter which he ought to have disclosed, or of wilfully misleading or deceiving the arbitrator or umpire;

(c) the award having been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration and restoring the suit; and no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court.

Judgment to be according to award.

522. If the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for reconsideration in manner aforesaid, and if no application has been made to set aside the award, or if the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to give judgment according to the award, or, if the award has been submitted to it in the form of a special case, according to its own opinion on such case:

Decree to follow.

Upon the judgment so given a decree shall follow, and shall be enforced in manner provided in this Code for the execution of decrees. No appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with, the award.

Agreement to refer to arbitration may be filed in Court.

523. When any persons agree in writing that any difference between them shall be referred to the arbitration of any person named in the agreement or to be appointed by any Court having jurisdiction in the matter to which the agreement relates, the parties thereto, or any of them, may apply that the agreement be filed in Court.

Application to be numbered and registered.

The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties interested or claiming to be interested as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the others or other of them as defendants or defendant, if the application have been presented by all the parties, or, if otherwise, between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

Notice to show cause against filing it.

On such application being made, the Court shall direct notice thereof to be given to any of the parties to the agreement other than the applicants, requiring such parties to show cause, within the time specified in the notice, why the agreement should not be filed.

If no sufficient cause be shown, the Court may cause the agreement to be filed, and shall make an order of reference thereon, and may also nominate the arbitrator when he is not named therein and the parties cannot agree as to the nomination.

Provisions of this chapter applicable to proceedings under order of reference.

524. The foregoing provisions of this chapter, so far as they are consistent with any agreement so filed, shall be applicable to all proceedings under an order of reference made by the Court under section 523, and to the award of arbitration and to the enforcement of the decree founded thereupon.

Filing award in matter referred to arbitration without intervention of Court.

525. When any matter has been referred to arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Justice, and an award has been made thereon, any person interested in the award may apply to the Court of the lowest grade having jurisdiction over the matter to which the award relates, that the award be filed in Court.

Application to be numbered and registered.

The application shall be in writing and shall be numbered and registered as a suit between the applicant as plaintiff and the other parties as defendants.

Notice to parties to arbitration.

The Court shall direct notice to be given to the parties to the arbitration other than the applicant, requiring them to show cause, within a time specified, why the award should not be filed.

Filing and enforcement of such award.

526. If no ground such as is mentioned or referred to in section 520 or 521, be shown against the award, the Court shall order it to be filed, and such award shall then take effect as an award made under the provisions of this chapter.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

OF PROCEEDINGS ON AGREEMENT OF PARTIES.

Power to state case for Court's opinion.

527. Parties claiming to be interested in the decision of any question of fact or law, may enter into an agreement in writing stating such question in the form of a case for the opinion of the Court, and providing that, upon the finding of the Court with respect to such question,

(a) a sum of money fixed by the parties or to be determined by the Court, shall be paid by one of the parties to the other of them; or

(b) some property, moveable or immoveable, specified in the agreement, shall be delivered by one of the parties to the other of them; or

(c) one or more of the parties shall do, or refrain from doing, some other particular act specified in the agreement.

Every case stated under this section shall be divided into consecutively numbered paragraphs, and shall concisely state such facts and documents as may be necessary to enable the Court to decide the question raised thereby.

When value of subject-matter must be stated.

528. If the agreement is for the delivery of any property, or for the doing, or the refraining from doing, any particular act, the estimated value of the property to be delivered, or to which the act specified has reference, shall be stated in the agreement.

Agreement to be filed and numbered as a suit.

529. The agreement, if framed in accordance with the rules hereinbefore contained, may be filed in the Court which would have jurisdiction to entertain a suit, the amount or value of the subject-matter of which is the same as the amount or value of the subject-matter of the agreement.

The agreement, when so filed, shall be numbered and registered as a suit between one or more of the parties claiming to be interested, as plaintiff or plaintiffs, and the other or others of them as defendant or defendants; and notice shall be given to all the parties to the agreement other than the party or parties by whom it was presented.

Parties to be subject to Court's jurisdiction.

530. When the agreement has been filed, the parties to it shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the Court, and shall be bound by the statements contained therein.

Hearing and disposal of the case.

531. The case shall be set down for hearing as a suit instituted under chapter V, the provisions of which shall apply to such suit so far as the same are applicable.

If the Court is satisfied, after an examination of the parties, or taking such evidence as it thinks fit,

(a) that the agreement was duly executed by them, and

(b) that they have a bonâ fide interest in the question stated therein, and

(c) that the same is fit to be decided, it shall proceed to pronounce judgment thereon, in the same way as in an ordinary suit, and upon the judgment so given a decree shall follow, and shall be enforced in the manner provided in this Code for the execution of decrees.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

OF SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

Institution of summary suits upon bills of exchange, &c.

532. In any Court to which this section applies all suits upon bills of exchange, hundís or promissory notes may, in case the plaintiff desires to proceed under this chapter, be instituted by presenting a plaint in the form prescribed by this Code; but the summons shall be in the form contained in the fourth schedule hereto annexed, No. 172, or in such other form as the High Court may from time to time prescribe.

In any case in which the plaint and summons are in such forms respectively, the defendant shall not appear or defend the suit unless he obtains leave from a Judge as hereinafter mentioned so to appear and defend; and in default of his obtaining such leave or of appearance and defence in pursuance thereof, the plaintiff shall be entitled to a decree for any sum not exceeding the sum mentioned in the summons, together with interest at the rate specified (if any) to the date of the decree, and a sum for costs to be fixed by a rule of the High Court, unless the plaintiff claim more than such fixed sum, in which case the costs shall be ascertained in the ordinary way, and such decree may be enforced forthwith.

Payment into Court of sum mentioned in summons.

The defendant shall not be required to pay into Court the sum mentioned in the summons, or to give security therefor, unless the Court thinks his defence not to be primâ facie sustainable, or feels reasonable doubt as to its good faith.

Explanation.—This section is not confined to cases in which the bill, hundí or note sued upon, together with mere lapse of time, is sufficient to establish a primâ facie right to recover.

Defendant showing defence on merits to have leave to appear.

533. The Court shall, upon application by the defendant, give leave to appear and to defend the suit, upon the defendant paying into Court the sum mentioned in the summons or upon affidavits satisfactory to the Court, which disclose a defence or such facts as would make it incumbent on the holder to prove consideration, or such other facts as the Court may deem sufficient to support the application, and on such terms as to security, framing and recording issues, or otherwise, as the Court thinks fit.

Power to set aside decree.

534. After decree, the Court may, under special circumstances, set aside the decree, and if necessary stay or set aside execution, and may give leave to appear to the summons and to defend the suit, if it seem reasonable to the Court so to do, and on such terms as the Court thinks fit.

Power to order bill to be deposited with officer of Court.

535. In any proceeding under this chapter the Court may order the bill, hundí or note on which the suit is founded to be forthwith deposited with an officer of the Court, and may further order that all proceedings shall be stayed until the plaintiff gives security for the costs thereof.

Recovery of cost of noting non-acceptance of dishonoured bill.

536. The holder of every dishonoured bill of exchange or promissory note shall have the same remedies for the recovery of the expenses incurred in noting the same for non-acceptance or non-payment, or otherwise, by reason of such dishonour, as he has under this chapter for the recovery of the amount of such bill or note.

Procedure in suits under this chapter.

537. Except as provided by sections 532 to 536 both inclusive, the procedure in suits under this chapter shall be the same as the procedure in suits instituted under chapter V.

Power to extend this chapter.

538. Sections 532 to 537 (both inclusive) apply only to—

(a) the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay

(b) the Court of the Recorder of Rangoon;

(c) the Courts of Small Causes in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay;

(d) the Court of the Judge of Karáchi; and

When suit relating to public charities may be brought.

539. PART VI.

OF APPEALS.

CHAPTER XLI.

OF APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

Appeal to lie from all original decrees, except when expressly prohibited.

540. Unless when otherwise expressly provided in this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from the decrees, or from any part of the decrees, of the Courts exercising original jurisdiction to the Courts authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of those Courts.

Form of appeal.

541. The appeal shall be made in the form of a memorandum in writing presented by the appellant, and shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against and (unless the appellate Court dispenses therewith) of the judgment on which it is founded.

Memorandum to be accompanied by copy of decree and judgment.

Such memorandum shall set forth, concisely and under distinct heads, the grounds of objection to the decree appealed against, without any argument or narrative, and such grounds shall be numbered consecutively.

Memorandum of appeal.

542. The appellant shall not, without the leave of the Court, urge or be heard in support of any other ground of objection, but the Court in deciding the appeal shall not be confined to the grounds set forth by the appellant:

Appellant confined to grounds set out.

Provided that the Court shall not rest its decision on any ground not set forth by the appellant, unless the respondent has had sufficient opportunity of contesting the case on that ground.

Rejection of memorandum or grounds of objection.

543. If the memorandum of appeal be not drawn up in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, it may be rejected, or be returned to the appellant for the purpose of being amended within a time to be fixed by the Court, or be amended then and there.

When the Court rejects under this section any memorandum, it shall record the reasons for such rejection.

When a memorandum of appeal is amended under this section the Judge, or such officer as he appoints in this behalf, shall attest the amendment by his signature.

One of several plaintiffs or defendants may obtain reversal of whole decree if it proceed on ground common to all.

544. Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit, and the decree appealed against proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal against the whole decree, and the Appellate Court may reverse or modify the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be.

Of staying and executing Decrees under Appeal.

Execution of decree not stayed solely by reason of appeal.

545. Execution of a decree shall not be stayed by reason only of an appeal having been preferred against the decree; but the Appellate Court may for sufficient cause order the execution to be stayed:

Stay of execution of appealable decree before time for appealing has expired.

If an application be made for stay of execution of an appealable decree before the expiry of the time allowed for appealing therefrom, the Court which passed the decree may for sufficient cause order the execution to be stayed:

Provided that no order shall be made under this section unless the Court making it is satisfied—

(a) that substantial loss may result to the party applying for stay of execution unless the order is made;

(b) that the application has been made without unreasonable delay; and

(c) that security has been given by the applicant for the due performance of such decree or order as may ultimately be binding upon him.

Security required before making order to stay execution.

546. If an order is made for the execution of a decree against which an appeal is pending, the Court which passed the decree shall, on sufficient cause being shown by the appellant, require security to be given for the restitution of any property which may be taken in execution of the decree, or for the payment of the value of such property, and for the due performance of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, or the Appellate Court may for like cause direct the Court which passed the decree to take such security.

Security in case of order for execution of decree appealed against.

And when an order has been passed for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree for money and an appeal is pending against such decree, the sale shall on the application of the judgment-debtor be stayed until the appeal is disposed of, on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court which passed the decree thinks fit.

547. No such security as is mentioned in sections 545 and 546 shall be required from the Secretary of State for India in Council, or (when Government has undertaken the defence of the suit) from any public officer sued in respect of an act alleged to be done by him in his official capacity.

No such security to be required from Government or public officers.

Of Procedure in Appeal from Decrees.

548. When a memorandum of appeal is admitted, the Appellate Court or the proper officer of that Court shall endorse thereon the date of presentation, and shall register the appeal in a book to be kept for the purpose.

Registry of memorandum of appeal.

Such book shall be called the Register of Appeals.

Register of appeals.

549. The Appellate Court may, at its discretion, either before the respondent is called upon to appear and answer or afterwards on the application of the respondent, demand from the appellant security for the costs of the appeal, or of the original suit, or of both:

Appellate Court may require appellant to give security for costs.

Provided that the Court shall demand such security in all cases in which the appellant is residing out of British India, and is not possessed of any sufficient immoveable property within British India independent of the property (if any) to which the appeal relates.

When appellant resides out of British India.

If such security be not furnished within such time as the Court orders, the Court shall reject the appeal.

550. When the memorandum of appeal is registered, the Appellate Court shall send notice of the appeal to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made.

Appellate Court to give notice to Court whose decree is appealed against.

If the appeal be from a Court the records of which are not deposited in the Appellate Court, the Court receiving such notice shall send with all practicable despatch all material papers in the suit, or such papers as may be specially called for by the Appellate Court.

Transmission of papers to Appellate Court.

Either party may apply in writing to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, specifying any of such papers in such Court of which he requires copies to be made; and copies of such papers shall be made at the expense of the applicant, and shall be deposited accordingly.

Copies of exhibits in Court whose decree is appealed against.

551. The Appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, after fixing a time for hearing the appellant or his pleader, and hearing him accordingly if he appears at such time, confirm the decision of the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, without sending notice of the appeal to such Court and without serving notice on the respondent or his pleader; but in such case the confirmation shall be notified to the same Court.

Power to confirm decision of lower Court without sending it notice.

552. The Appellate Court, unless where it confirms, under section 551, the decision of the lower Court, shall fix a day for hearing the appeal.

Day for hearing appeal.

Such day shall be fixed with reference to the current business of the Court, the place of residence of the respondent, and the time necessary for the service of the notice of appeal, so as to allow the respondent sufficient time to appear and answer the appeal on such day.

553. Notice of the day so fixed shall be stuck up in the appellate court-house, and a like notice shall be sent by the Appellate Court to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, and shall be served on the respondent or on his pleader in the Appellate Court in the manner provided in chapter VI for the service on a defendant of a summons to appear and answer; and all rules applicable to such summons and to proceedings with reference to the service thereof, shall apply to the service of such notice.

Publication and service of notice of day for hearing appeal.

Instead of sending the notice to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, the Appellate Court may itself cause the notice to be served on the respondent or his pleader under the rules above referred to.

Appellate Court may itself cause notice to be served.

554. The notice to the respondent shall declare that, if he does not appear in the Appellate Court on the day so fixed, the appeal will be heard ex parte.

Contents of notice.

Procedure on Hearing.

555. On the day so fixed, or on any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the party having the right to begin shall be heard in support of or against the appeal, as the case may be. The other party shall then be heard, and the party having the right to begin shall then be entitled to reply.

Explanation.—If the appeal is from the whole decree, or if there are cross-appeals, the party having the right to begin is the party who had the right to begin on the hearing in the Court whose decree is appealed from.

If the appeal is from only a portion of the decree, and there is no cross-appeal, the appellant has the right to begin.

Dismissal of appeal for appellant's default.

556. If on the day so fixed, or any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, the appellant does not attend in person or by his pleader, the appeal shall be dismissed for default.

Hearing appeal ex parte.

If the appellant attends and the respondent does not attend, the appeal shall be heard ex parte in his absence.

Dismissal of appeal where notice has not been served in consequence of appellant's failure to deposit cost of notice.

557. If on the day so fixed, or any other day to which the hearing may be adjourned, it is found that the notice to the respondent has not been served in consequence of the failure of the appellant to deposit, within the period fixed by the Court, the sum required to defray the cost of issuing the notice, the Court may order that the appeal be dismissed:

Proviso.

Provided that no such order shall be passed, although the notice has not been served upon the respondent, if on the day fixed for hearing the appeal the respondent appears in person or by a pleader, or by a duly authorized agent.

Re-admission of appeal dismissed for default.

558. If an appeal be dismissed under section 556 or section 557, the appellant may apply to the Appellate Court for the re-admission of the appeal; and if it be proved that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from attending when the appeal was called on for hearing or from depositing the sum so required, the Court may re-admit the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as the Court thinks fit to impose upon him.

Power to adjourn hearing, and direct persons appearing interested to be made respondents.

559. If it appear to the Court at the hearing that any person who was a party to the suit in the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, but who has not been made a party to the appeal, is interested in the result of the appeal, the Court may adjourn the hearing to a future day to be fixed by the Court, and direct that such person be made a respondent.

Re-hearing on application of respondent against whom ex parte decree is made.

560. When an appeal is heard ex parte in the absence of the respondent, and judgment is given against him, he may apply to the Appellate Court to re-hear the appeal; and if it be proved that the respondent was prevented by sufficient cause from attending when the appeal was called on for hearing, the Court may re-hear the appeal on such terms as to costs or otherwise as the Court thinks fit to impose upon him.

Upon hearing respondent may object to decree as if he had preferred separate appeal.

561. Any respondent, though he may not have appealed against any part of the decree, may upon the hearing not only support the decree on any of the grounds decided against him in the Court below, but take any objection to the decree which he could have taken by way of appeal, provided he has given to the appellant or his pleader seven days' notice of such objection.

Form of notice, and provisions applicable thereto.

Such objection shall be in the form of a memorandum, and the provisions of section 541, so far as they relate to the form and contents of the memorandum of appeal, shall apply thereto.

Remand of case by Appellate Court.

562. If the Court against whose decree the appeal is made has disposed of the suit upon a preliminary point so as to exclude any evidence of fact which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the determination of the rights of the parties, and the decree upon such preliminary point is reversed in appeal, the Appellate Court may, if it thinks fit, by order remand the case, together with a copy of the order in appeal, to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, with directions to re-admit the suit under its original number in the register and proceed to investigate the suit on the merits.

The Appellate Court may, if it think fit, direct what issue or issues shall be tried in any case so remanded.

When further evidence barred.

563. When a case is remanded with directions to take any evidence so excluded the Court to which the case is remanded shall not take any other evidence in the case, except evidence tendered to contradict the evidence so taken.

Limit to remand.

564. The Appellate Court shall not remand a case for a second decision, except as provided in section 562.

When evidence on record sufficient, Appellate Court shall determine case finally.

565. When the evidence upon the record is sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to pronounce judgment, the Appellate Court shall, after re-settling the issues, if necessary, finally determine the case notwithstanding that the judgment of the Court against whose decree the appeal is made has proceeded wholly upon some ground other than that on which the Appellate Court proceeds.

When Appellate Court may frame issues and refer them for trial to Court whose decree is appealed against.

566. If the Court against whose decree the appeal is made has omitted to frame or try any issue, or to determine any question of fact, which appears to the Appellate Court essential to the right decision of the suit upon the merits, and the evidence upon the record is not sufficient to enable the Appellate Court to determine such issue or question, the Appellate Court may frame issues for trial, and may refer the same for trial to the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, and in such case shall direct such Court to take the additional evidence required, and such Court shall proceed to try such issue, and shall return to the Appellate Court its finding thereon together with the evidence.

Finding and evidence to be put on record.

Objections to finding.

567. Such finding and evidence shall become part of the record in the suit; and either party may, within a time to be fixed by the Appellate Court, present a memorandum of objections to the finding.

Determination of appeal.

After the expiration of the period fixed for presenting such memorandum, the Appellate Court shall proceed to determine the appeal.

Production of additional evidence in Appellate Court.

568. The parties to an appeal shall not be entitled to produce additional evidence, whether oral or documentary, in the Appellate Court. But if

(a) the Court against whose decree the appeal is made refused to admit evidence which ought to have been admitted, or,

(b) the Appellate Court requires any document to be produced or any witness to be examined to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other substantial cause, the Appellate Court may allow such evidence to be produced, or document to be received, or witness to be examined.

Whenever additional evidence is admitted by an Appellate Court, the Court shall record on its proceedings the reason for such admission.

Mode of taking additional evidence.

569. Whenever additional evidence is allowed to be received, the Appellate Court may either take such evidence, or direct the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, or any other subordinate Court, to take such evidence and to send it when taken to the Appellate Court.

Points to be defined and recorded.

570. In all cases where additional evidence is directed or allowed to be taken, the Appellate Court shall specify the points to which the evidence is to be confined, and record on its proceedings the points so specified.

Of the Judgment in Appeal.

Judgment when and where pronounced.

571. The Appellate Court, after hearing the parties or their pleaders and referring to any part of the proceedings, whether on appeal or in the Court against whose decree the appeal is made, to which reference may be considered necessary, shall pronounce judgment in open Court, either at once or on some future day, of which notice shall be given to the parties or their pleaders.

Language of judgment.

572. The judgment shall be written in English; provided that if English is not the mother-tongue of the Judge, and he is not able to write an intelligible judgment in English, the judgment shall be written in his mother-tongue or in the language of the Court.

Translation of judgment.

573. When the language in which the judgment is written is not the language of the Court, the judgment shall, if any party so require, be translated into such language, and the translation, after it has been ascertained to be correct, shall be signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf.

Contents of judgment.

574. The judgment of the Appellate Court shall state—

(a) the points for determination;

(b) the decision thereupon;

(c) the reasons for the decision; and

(d) when the decree appealed against is reversed or varied, the relief to which the appellant is entitled, and shall at the time that it is pronounced be signed and dated by the Judge or by the Judges concurring therein.

Date and signature.

Decision when appeal is heard by two or more Judges.

575. When the appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges.

If there be no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed against, such decree shall be affirmed:

Provided that if the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court, and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of all the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

When there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed against, such decree shall be affirmed.

The High Court may from time to time make rules consistent with this Code to regulate references under this section.

Dissent to be recorded.

576. When the appeal is heard by more Judges than one, any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court shall state in writing the decision or order which he thinks should be passed on the appeal, and he may state his reasons for the same.

What judgment may direct.

577. The judgment may be for confirming, varying or reversing the decree of the Court against which the appeal is made, or, if the parties to the appeal agree as to the form which the decree in appeal shall take, or as to the order to be passed in appeal, the Appellate Court may pass a decree or order accordingly.

No decree to be reversed or modified for error or irregularity not affecting merits or jurisdiction.

578. No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal, on account of any error, defect or irregularity, whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit, or otherwise, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

Of the Decree in Appeal.

579. The decree of the Appellate Court shall bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced.

Contents of decree.

The decree shall contain the number of the appeal, and the memorandum of appeal, including the names and description of the appellant and respondent, and shall specify clearly the relief granted or other determination of the appeal.

The decree shall also state the amount of costs incurred in the appeal, and by what parties and in what proportions such costs and the costs in the suit are to be paid.

The decree shall be signed and dated by the Judge or Judges who passed it:

Provided that where there are more Judges than one, if there be a difference of opinion among them, it shall not be necessary for any Judge dissenting from the judgment of the Court to sign the decree.

Judge dissenting from judgment need not sign decree.

580. Certified copies of the judgment and decree in appeal shall be furnished to the parties on application to the Court and at their expense.

Copies of judgment and decree to be furnished to parties.

581. A copy of the judgment and of the decree, certified by the Appellate Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf, shall be sent to the Court which passed the decree appealed against, and shall be filed with the original proceedings in the suit, and an entry of the judgment of the Appellate Court shall be made in the register of civil suits.

The provisions hereinbefore contained shall apply to appeals under this chapter so far as such provisions are applicable.

583. When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits.

[Second Publication.]

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor-General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 21st March 1877

No. 8 OF 1877.

A Bill to facilitate the admission of Military Lunatics into Asylums.

WHEREAS it is expedient to facilitate the admission of European Military Lunatics into Asylums, and to amend the law now in force with regard to the admission thereto of Native Military Lunatics; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Preamble.

1. This Act may be called the "Military Lunatics Act, 1877:"

Short title.

It extends to the whole of British India and, so far as regards subjects of Her Majesty, to the dominions of Native Princes and States in India in alliance with Her Majesty;

Local extent.

And it shall come into force on the passing thereof.

Commencement.

2. Act XXI of 1872 (to facilitate the admission of Native Military Lunatics into Asylums) shall be repealed.

Repeal of Act XXI of 1872.

3. Whenever any European officer, Warrant-officer, Non-commissioned officer, soldier or other person subject to the provisions of the Act for punishing Mutiny and Desertion and for the better payment of the Army and their quarters for the time being in force has been declared a lunatic, in accordance with the provisions of the military regulations of the Presidency to which he belongs, and has been ordered to be forwarded to any one of the Presidency-towns, and it appears to one of the Surgeons General, either of the British Forces or of the Indian Medical Service, according to the Presidency and the service to which the said lunatic belongs, that it is inexpedient that he should be removed to England, or that he should be detained in military custody until he can be conveniently sent to England, such Surgeon General may, if he think fit, make an order under his hand for the reception of the said lunatic into the Lunatic Asylum at Bhowanipur, Madras, or Bombay, or such other Lunatic Asylum as may be duly authorized for the purpose by the Governor-General in Council; and the officer in charge of such asylum shall receive the lunatic in the asylum, and detain him therein until he is discharged therefrom, in accordance with the local military regulations in force for the time being, or until the Surgeon General applies for his transfer to the military authorities in view to his removal to England.

Procedure in respect of European officer or soldier declared lunatic.

4. Whenever any Native officer, Non-commissioned officer or soldier appears to be insane, the officer commanding the regiment or detachment to which he belongs shall report the case to the general officer commanding the division or district or force in which such regiment or detachment is serving.

Report in case of Native officer or soldier appearing to be insane.

5. Such general officer shall thereupon cause the said Native to be examined by a committee composed of at least two medical officers, or (if this be impracticable) by a regimental committee comprising the officer in command of the wing or squadron to which the Native belongs and the medical officer in charge of the corps or detachment of which such wing or squadron forms part.

Procedure on Native being found by committee to be insane.

6. If the said committee or regimental committee (as the case may be) are satisfied that the Native is insane, the officer commanding the division or district or force may, if he thinks fit, make an order under his hand for the reception of the said Native into a Lunatic Asylum, and shall then send him thither under military escort; and the officer in charge of such asylum shall receive the Native into the asylum and detain him therein until he is discharged therefrom in accordance with the local military regulations in force for the time being.

Procedure for discharge of European or Native military lunatic.

7. Whenever it appears to the officer in charge of a Lunatic Asylum that the discharge of a military lunatic, whether European or Native, is necessary either on account of his recovery, or for any other purpose, such person shall be brought before the visitors of the asylum, and on the visitors recording their opinion that the discharge should be made, the general officer commanding the division, district or force, or other officer authorized to order the admission of military lunatics into asylums, shall forthwith direct him to be discharged, and such discharge shall take place in accordance with the local military regulations in force for the time being.

Payment of expenses of lunatic.

8. The Paymaster of the military circle within which any such asylum is situate shall pay to the officer in charge of such asylum the expense of the lodging, maintenance, clothing and medicine of every lunatic, whether European or Native, received and detained under this Act.

Legalization of past receptions in asylum.

9. All military lunatics heretofore received into Lunatic Asylums shall be deemed to have been so received in accordance with law.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

It appears that at present there is no law whatever under which British soldiers afflicted with mental disease can be admitted into, or when cured) discharged from, Lunatic Asylums in this country; and the primary object of this Bill is to legalize such admission and discharge.

At the same time the opportunity has been taken to amend the law as to the discharge of Native military lunatics. The Bill proposes to repeal Act XXI of 1872 (to facilitate the admission of Native Military Lunatics into Asylums) and re-enact it with the necessary addition.

[First Publication]

The following Bill was introduced into the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 28th March 1877, and was referred to a Select Committee:-

No. 10 OF 1877.

A Bill to provide for the execution of emergent works in connection with embankments in British Burma.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to provide for the execution of emergent works in connection with embankments in British Burma; It is hereby enacted as follows:—

Short title.

1. This Act may be called "The Burma Embankment Act, 1877:"

Local extent.

It extends to all the territories for the time being under the administration of the Chief Commissioner of British Burma; but nothing herein contained applies to embankments belonging to private persons;

Commencement.

And it shall come into force on the passing thereof.

Interpretation-clause.

2. In this Act —

"Embankment."

"Embankment" means any embankment constructed for the purpose of excluding, regulating or retaining water, and includes all earthen walls, dams, canals, drains, piers, groins, sluices, buildings, water-gauges, bench-marks and other works subsidiary to any such embankment; and

"Embankment-officer."

"Embankment-officer," used with reference to an embankment, means the officer appointed by the Chief Commissioner to carry out this Act in respect of such embankment.

Circumstances under which this Act may be put in operation.

3. Whenever it appears probable to the embankment-officer that unless some work is quickly executed in connection with an embankment, loss of life or extensive damage to property will ensue, and that the labourers or materials required for the execution of such work cannot be obtained in the ordinary course in time to enable him to execute such work with the expedition necessary in order to avert such loss or damage, he may, by order under his hand, direct that the provisions of this Act shall be put into operation for the execution of such work; and thereupon Power to impress labour.

(a) every able-bodied male person belonging to any class of labourers, and residing in the neighbourhood of such embankment shall, if required to do so by such officer or any person authorized by him in this behalf be bound to assist such officer in the execution of such work by labouring thereon, after the manner of his class or trade, as such officer or any person authorized by him in this behalf may direct; and

Power to take materials.

(b) such officer or any person authorized by him in this behalf may enter upon any immoveable property in the said neighbourhood and take possession of, appropriate and remove, any trees or bamboos, whether standing or not, and any timber, mats, rope or other materials found on such property, and use the same for the purposes of such work.

Payment for labour impressed and materials taken.

4. All persons labouring in compliance with a requisition made under section three, or whose materials may be taken under that section, shall as soon as may be reasonably practicable be paid by the embankment-officer for their labour or for such materials (as the case may be) at such rates not being less than fifteen per cent. above the market-rates for similar labour or materials for the time being prevailing in the said neighbourhood as the Chief Commissioner may from time to time by written order direct.

Compensation for damage done in taking materials.

5. When from the removal of any trees, bamboos or other materials under section three, any damage over and above the price payable for such materials under section four, results directly to any person, the embankment-officer shall pay to such person such sum as may be agreed upon as compensation for such damage, or in case of dispute as to the amount so to be paid, as the Deputy Commissioner of the district may award.

Penalties for trespass on embankments, &c.

6. Where an embankment-officer has been appointed for any embankment, any person who, without the permission of such officer—

(a) grazes any cattle or allows any cattle under his charge to trespass on such embankment, or

(b) cuts or roots out any trees, shrubs or grass growing on such embankment, or

(c) obstructs any drain or sluice connected with such embankment, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine which may extend to two hundred rupees, or with both.

Certain persons to be deemed public servants.

7. Every embankment-officer and every officer authorized by an embankment-officer to act under section three, shall be deemed to be a "public servant" within the meaning of the Indian Penal Code.

STATEMENT OF OBJECTS AND REASONS.

The primary object of this Bill is to legalize and regulate the levying of labour when sudden danger threatens embankment-works in floods, and when such labour cannot be hired. The necessity for provisions of this kind became apparent in the Irrawaddy floods of 1875, when some of the embankments were breached and others overflowed. In some cases the people whose property was threatened with injury came forward cheerfully and prevented further disaster; but in others, where the danger was equally real and of greater extent, but not so immediately apparent, great difficulty was experienced in getting the people whose lives and property were jeopardized to assist in any way in saving the works.

The great losses of life and property that have occurred during the last few years all over the world prove that the works esteemed the most perfect are liable to such sudden and unforeseen failures, and almost universal experience proves that the only remedy possible to apply in such cases consists in the labour of the persons most interested being concentrated on the weaker spots under proper direction.

This Bill will therefore legalize a practice which already obtains imperfectly in Burma, and which is general where embankment-works exist.

In drawing up the details of the Bill, attention has been given to Act No. I of 1858 relating to similar works in Madras.

Secy. to the Govt. of India.

The following Report of a Select Committee, together with the Bill as settled by them, was presented to the Council of the Governor General of India for the purpose of making Laws and Regulations on the 28th March 1877:—

We, the undersigned Members of the Select Committee to which the Bill for the limitation of suits and for other purposes was referred, have the honour to report that we have considered the Bill and the papers noted in the margin.

From Financial Department, No. 178, dated 5th May 1873.
„ Government of Bombay, No. 4418, dated 31st July 1875.
Note by Sir R. Garth, C.J., dated 8th March 1876.
„ by Secretary, Legislative Department, dated August 1876.
„ by Hon'ble Mr. Hobhouse, dated 22nd October 1876.
From Home Department, No. 1884, dated 18th December 1876.
Observations by Sir R. Garth, C.J., dated 12th January 1877.
Suggestions by Bábu Opendro Nauth Mullick, dated 2nd March 1877.
Remarks by Bábu Abinásh Chandra Bannerjee, Munsif of Agra, dated 7th March 1877.
Note by N. H. Thomson, Esq., dated 23rd March 1877.
From Department of Revenue, Agriculture and Commerce, No. 216, dated 19th March 1877, and enclosures.

2. We have postponed the commencement of the proposed Act to 1st October 1877, the day on which the Code of Civil Procedure is to come into force.

3. We have declared that nothing in the proposed Act shall operate to revive any right to sue which was barred under Act IX of 1871.

4. We have struck out as unnecessary the definition of 'minor.'

5. We have extended to appeals and applications, the provisions of section 13 as to excluding the day on which the right to sue accrued.

6. We have also excluded, in the case of appeals, the time necessary for obtaining a copy of the judgment.

7. In computing the period prescribed for any suit, we think that the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting any proceeding (whether it be a suit, an appeal or an application for execution) against the same defendant in a Court unable to entertain it should be excluded.

8. We have made a similar alteration in section 17, so as to exclude the time occupied by a judgment-debtor in setting aside an execution-sale.

9. In the Schedule we have made the following substantial amendments :—

10. We have provided (No. 11) for suits by persons against whom orders are passed under sections 280, 281, 282, 335 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to establish their right to, or to the present possession of, property comprised in the order.

11. In the case of suits for the restitution of conjugal rights, we think that the refusal mentioned in the third column should be by a husband or wife of full age and sound mind. It is clear, for instance, that the refusal of a minor wife should not make time run against the husband.

12. We have made the No. (104) relating to suits by managers of the joint estates of undivided families apply as well to Muhammadans as to Hindús. In Lower Bengal, the joint family system prevails among both classes of religionists.

13. We have altered Nos. 125, 123 and 124 as follows :—

115. To obtain a declaration that an adoption is invalid	Six years	When the alleged adoption becomes known to the plaintiff.
116. To obtain a declaration that an adoption is valid	Ditto	When the rights of the adopted son as such are interfered with.
123. By a person excluded from joint family property to enforce a right to share therein	Twelve years	When the exclusion becomes known to the plaintiff.
124. By a Hindú for arrears of maintenance ...	Ditto ...	When the arrears are payable.
125. By a Hindú for a declaration of his right to maintenance	Ditto ...	When the right is denied.

14. We have struck out No. 135 as being comprised in No. 139, and No. 168 as being now useless.

15. We have provided for application for a re-hearing on an appeal heard ex parte.

16. We have cut down from 90 to 30 days the time allowed a pauper to apply for leave to appeal.

17. We have provided a general clause for applications for which no period is expressly provided.

18. We have made a few changes in wording and arrangement, and we recommend that the Bill thus amended be passed. But first we think that it should be republished.

A Bill for the Limitation of Suits, and for other Purposes.

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is expedient to amend the law relating to the limitation of suits, appeals and certain applications to Courts; And whereas it is also expedient to provide rules for acquiring by possession the ownership of easements and other property; It is hereby enacted as follows:

PART I.

PRELIMINARY.

Short title.

1. This Act may be called 'The Indian Limitation Act, 1877:'

Extent of Act.

It extends to the whole of British India; but nothing contained in sections two and three or in Parts II and III applies—

(a) to suits under the Indian Divorce Act, or

(b) to suits under Madras Regulation VI of 1831;

Commencement.

And it shall come into force on the first day of October 1877.

Repeal of Act IX of 1871.

2. On and from that day Act No. IX of 1871 (An Act for the Limitation of Suits and for other purposes) shall be repealed.

But all references to such Act shall be read as if made to this Act; and nothing herein or in that Act contained shall be deemed to affect any title acquired, or to revive any right to sue barred, under that Act or under any enactment thereby repealed.

Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any suit mentioned in No. 143, No. 144 or No. 145 of the schedule hereto annexed, may be brought within five years next after the said first day of October 1877, unless where the period prescribed for such suit by the said Act No. IX of 1871, shall have expired before the completion of the said five years.

Interpretation-clause.

3. In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—

'plaintiff' includes also any person from or through whom a plaintiff derives his right to sue:

'easement' includes also a right, not arising from contract, by which one person is entitled to remove and appropriate for his own profit any part of the soil belonging to another, or anything growing in, or attached to, or subsisting upon, the land of another:

'bill of exchange' includes also a hundí:

'trustee' does not include a benámídár, a mortgagee remaining in possession after the mortgage has been satisfied, or a wrong-doer in possession without title:

'suit' does not include an appeal or an application:

'registered' means duly registered under the law for the registration of documents in force at the time and place of executing the document referred to in the context:

'foreign country' means any country other than British India; and nothing shall be deemed to be done in 'good faith' which is not done with due care and attention.

PART II.

LIMITATION OF SUITS, APPEALS AND APPLICATIONS.

Dismissal of suits, &c., instituted, &c., after period of limitation.

4. Subject to the provisions contained in sections five to twenty-six (inclusive), every suit instituted, appeal presented, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the schedule hereto annexed, shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence.

Explanation.—A suit is instituted in ordinary cases when the plaint, stamped in accordance with the law for the time being in force, is presented to the proper officer: in the case of a pauper, when his application for leave to sue as a pauper is filed; and in the case of a claim against a company which is being wound up by the Court, when the claimant first sends in his claim to the official liquidator.

Illustrations.

(a).—A suit is instituted after the prescribed period of limitation. Limitation is not set up as a defence and judgment is given for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals. The appellate court must dismiss the suit.

(b).—An appeal presented after the prescribed period is admitted and registered. The appeal shall, nevertheless, be dismissed.

Proviso where Court is closed when period expires.

5. If the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application expires on a day when the Court is closed, the suit, appeal or application may be instituted, presented or made on the day that the Court re-opens:

Proviso as to appeals and applications for review.

Any appeal or application for a review of judgment may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor, when the appellant or applicant satisfies the Court that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal or making the application within such period.

Different periods of limitation prescribed by local laws.

6. When, by any special or local law now or hereafter in force in British India, a period of limitation is specially prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, nothing herein contained shall affect or alter the period so prescribed.

Appeals from decrees of High Courts on original side.

And nothing herein contained shall affect the periods of limitation prescribed for appeals from, or applications to review, any decree, order or judgment of a High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction.

Legal disability.

7. If a person entitled to sue be, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, a minor, or insane, or an idiot, he may institute the suit within the same period after the disability has ceased, as would otherwise have been allowed from the time prescribed therefor in the third column of the schedule hereto annexed.

Double and successive disabilities.

When he is, at the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned, affected by two disabilities, or when before his disability has ceased he is affected by another disability, he may institute the suit within the same period after both disabilities have ceased as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

Disability of representative.

When his disability continues up to his death, his representative in interest may institute the suit within the same period after the death as would otherwise have been allowed from the time so prescribed.

When such representative is at the date of the death affected by any disability, the rules contained in the former part of this section shall apply.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to extend, for more than three years from the cessation of the disability or the death of the person affected thereby, the period within which the suit must be brought.

Illustrations.

(a). The right to sue for the hire of a boat accrues to A during his minority. He attains majority four years after such accruer. He may institute his suit at any time within three years from the date of his attaining majority.

(b). A, to whom a right to sue for a legacy has accrued during his minority, attains majority eleven years after such accruer. A has, under the ordinary law, only one year remaining within which to sue. But under this section an extension of two years will be allowed him, making in all a period of three years from the date of his attaining majority, within which he may bring his suit.

(c). A right to sue accrues to Z during his minority. After the accruer, but while Z is still a minor, he becomes insane. Time runs against Z from the date when his insanity ceases.

(e). A right to sue for an hereditary office accrues to A, who at the time is insane. Six years after the accrual A recovers his reason. A has six years, under the ordinary law, from the date when his insanity ceased within which to institute a suit. No extension of time will be given him under this section.

(f). A right to sue as landlord to recover possession from a tenant accrues to A who is an idiot. A dies three years after the accruer, his idiocy continuing up to the date of his death. A's representative in interest has, under the ordinary law, nine years from the date of A's death within which to bring a suit. This section does not extend that time, except where the representative is himself under disability when the representation devolves upon him.

Disability of one joint creditor.

8. When one of several joint creditors or claimants is under any such disability, and when a discharge can be given without the concurrence of such person, time will run against them all: but where no such discharge can be given, time will not run as against any of them until they all are free from disability.

Illustrations.

(a) A incurs a debt to a firm of which B, C and D are partners. B is insane and C is a minor. D can give a discharge of the debt without the concurrence of B and C. Time runs against B, C and D.

(b) A incurs a debt to a firm of which E, F and G are partners. E and F are insane, and G is a minor. Time will not run against any of them until they are all free from disability.

Continuous running of time.

9. When once time has begun to run, no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it:

Provided that where letters of administration to the estate of a creditor have been granted to his debtor, the running of the time prescribed for a suit to recover the debt shall be suspended while the administration continues.

Suits against express trustees and their representatives.

10. Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose or against his representatives, for the purpose of following in his or their hands such property, shall be barred by any length of time.

Explanation.—A purchaser in good faith for value from a trustee is not his representative within the meaning of this section.

Suits on foreign contracts.

11. Suits instituted in British India on contracts entered into in a foreign country are subject to the rules prescribed by this Act.

Foreign limitation law.

12. No foreign rule of limitations shall be a defence to a suit instituted in British India on a contract entered into in a foreign country, unless the rule has extinguished the contract, and the parties were domiciled in such country during the period prescribed by such rule.

PART III.

COMPUTATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION.

Exclusion of day on which right to sue accrues.

13. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, the day from which such period is to be reckoned shall be excluded.

Exclusion in case of appeals and certain applications.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal as a pauper, and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appeal against or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.

Where a decree is appealed against or sought to be reviewed, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an application to set aside an award, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the award shall be excluded.

Exclusion of time of defendant's absence from British India.

14. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded, unless service of a summons to appear and answer in the suit can, during such absence, be made under the Code of Civil Procedure, section 89.

Exclusion of time of proceeding bonâ fide in Court without jurisdiction.

15. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the time during which the plaintiff has been prosecuting with due diligence another proceeding, whether in a Court of first instance or in a Court of appeal, against the defendant or some person whom he represents, shall be excluded, where the proceeding is founded upon the same cause of action, and is prosecuted in good faith in a Court which, from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to entertain it.

Like exclusion in case of order under Civil Procedure Code, s. 20.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit proceedings in which have been stayed by order under the Code of Civil Procedure, section 20, the interval between the institution of the suit and the date of so staying proceedings, and the time requisite for going from the Court in which proceedings are stayed to the Court in which the suit is re-instituted, shall be excluded.

Like exclusion in case of application.

In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any application, the time during which the applicant has been making another application for the same relief, shall be excluded, where the last-mentioned application is made in good faith to a Court which from defect of jurisdiction, or other cause of a like nature, is unable to grant it.

Explanation 1.—In excluding the time during which a former suit or application was pending or being made, the day on which that suit or application was instituted or made, and the day on which the proceedings therein ended, shall both be counted.

Explanation 2.—A plaintiff resisting an appeal presented on the ground of want of jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be prosecuting a suit within the meaning of this section.

Exclusion of time during which commencement of suit is stayed by injunction or order.

16. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, the institution of which has been stayed by injunction or order, the time of the continuance of the injunction or order, shall be excluded.

Exclusion of time during which judgment-debtor is attempting to set aside execution-sale.

17. In computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit for possession by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree, the time during which the judgment-debtor has been prosecuting a proceeding to set aside the sale, shall be excluded.

Effect of death before right to sue accrues.

18. When a person who would, if he were living, have a right to sue, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a representative in interest of the deceased capable of suing.

When a person against whom, if he were living, a right to sue would have accrued, dies before the right accrues, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when there is a representative whom the plaintiff may sue.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to suits for the possession of immoveable property or of an hereditary office.

Effect of fraud.

19. When any person having a right to sue has, by means of fraud, been kept from the knowledge of such right or of the title on which it is founded, or where any document necessary to establish such right has been fraudulently concealed,

the time limited for commencing a suit,

(a) against the person guilty of the fraud or accessory thereto, or,

(b) against any person claiming through him otherwise than in good faith and for a valuable consideration, shall be computed from the time when the fraud first became known to the person injuriously affected thereby, or, in the case of the concealed document, when he first had the means of producing it or compelling its production.

Effect of acknowledgment in writing.

20. If before the expiration of the period prescribed for a suit in respect of any property or right a substantial acknowledgment of liability in respect of such property or right has been made in writing signed by the party against whom such property or right is claimed, or by some person through whom he derives title or liability, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the acknowledgment was so signed.

When the writing containing the acknowledgment is undated, oral evidence may be given of the time when it was signed. But oral evidence of its contents shall not be received unless it has been destroyed wrongfully by the person on whom the acknowledgment would be binding.

EXPLANATION 1.—For the purposes of this section an acknowledgment may be sufficient, though it omits to specify the exact nature of the property or right, or avers that the time for payment, delivery or performance has not yet come, or is accompanied by a refusal to pay, deliver or perform, or is coupled with a claim to a set-off, or is addressed to a person other than the person entitled to the property or right:

EXPLANATION 2.—In this section means signed either personally or by an agent generally or specially authorised in this behalf.

EXPLANATION 3.—Nothing in this section renders one of several partners or executors chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed by another of them.

Illustrations.

Z, a bond-debtor, himself writes a letter promising to pay the debt to his creditor A. Z affixes his seal, but does not sign the letter:

Z pays part of the debt, making no written record of the fact of the payment, and promises orally to pay the rest:

Z publishes an advertisement, requesting his creditors to bring in their claims for examination:

In none of these cases is the debt taken out of the operation of this Act.

Effect of payment of interest as such.

21. When interest on a debt or legacy is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid as such by the person liable to pay the debt or legacy, or by his agent generally or specially authorized in this behalf, or when part of the principal of a debt is, before the expiration of the prescribed period, paid by the debtor or by his agent generally or specially authorized in this behalf, a new period of limitation, according to the nature of the original liability, shall be computed from the time when the payment was made:

Effect of part-payment of principal.

Provided that, in the case of part-payment of principal, the debt has arisen from a contract in writing and the fact of the payment appears in the hand-writing of the person making the same, on the instrument, or in his own books, or in the books of the creditor.

Effect of receipt of produce of mortgaged land.

Where mortgaged land is in the possession of the mortgagee, the receipt of the produce of such land shall be deemed to be a payment for the purpose of this section.

Effect of substituting or adding new plaintiff or defendant.

22. When, after the institution of a suit, a new plaintiff or defendant is substituted or added, the suit shall, as regards him, be deemed to have been instituted when he was so made a party:

Proviso where original plaintiff dies.

Provided that, when a plaintiff dies, and the suit is continued by his representatives in interest, it shall, as regards them, be deemed to have been instituted when it was instituted by the deceased plaintiff:

Proviso where original defendant dies.

Provided also, that, when a defendant dies, and the suit is continued against his representatives in interest, it shall, as regards them, be deemed to have been instituted when it was instituted against the deceased defendant.

Computation where there are successive breaches of contract.

23. In the case of a suit for the breach of a contract, where there are successive breaches, a fresh right to sue arises, and a fresh period of limitation begins to run, upon every fresh breach.

Nothing in the former part of this section applies to suits for the breach of contracts for the payment of money by instalments, where, on default made in payment of one instalment, the whole becomes due.

Illustration.

(a).—A contracts to pay an annuity to B for his life by quarterly instalments. A fails to pay any of the instalments. Here upon every fresh failure, a fresh right to sue arises and a fresh period of limitation begins to run; and this Act may bar the remedy on the earlier breaches without affecting the remedy on the later breaches.

Continuing breaches and wrongs.

24. In the case of a continuing breach of contract and in the case of a continuing wrong independent of contract, a fresh right to sue arises, and a fresh period of limitation begins to run, at every moment of the time during which the breach or the wrong, as the case may be, continues.

Illustrations.

(a).—A, a tenant, covenants with B, his landlord, to keep certain buildings in repair. At every moment of the time during which the buildings continue out of repair and B retains his right of entry, a fresh right to sue arises and a fresh period of limitation begins to run.

(b).—A diverts B's watercourse. At every moment of the time during which the diversion continues and B retains his right of entry, a fresh right to sue arises and a fresh period of limitation begins to run.

Suit for compensation for act becoming unlawful.

25. In the case of a suit for compensation for an act lawful in itself which becomes unlawful in case it causes damage, the period of limitation shall be computed from the time when the damage accrues.

Illustration.

A owns the surface of a field. B owns the subsoil. B digs coal thereout without causing any immediate apparent injury to the surface, but at last the surface subsides. The period of limitation runs from the time of the subsidence.

Computation of time mentioned in instruments.

26. All instruments shall, for the purposes of this Act, be deemed to be made with reference to the Gregorian calendar.

Illustrations.

(a).—A Hindú makes a promissory note bearing a Native date only, and payable four months after date. The period of limitation applicable to a suit on the note runs from the expiry of four months after date computed according to the Gregorian calendar.

(b).—A Hindú makes a bond, bearing a Native date only, for the repayment of money within one year. The period of limitation applicable to a suit on the bond runs from the expiry of one year after date computed according to the Gregorian calendar.

PART IV.

ACQUISITION OF OWNERSHIP BY POSSESSION.

Acquisition of right to easements.

27. Where the access and use of light or air to and for any building have been peaceably enjoyed therewith, as an easement, and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years, and where any way or watercourse, or the use of any water, or any other easement (whether affirmative or negative) has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, and for twenty years the right to such access and use of light or air, way, watercourse, use of water, or other easement, shall be absolute and indefeasible.

Each of the said periods of twenty years shall be taken to be a period ending within two years next before the institution of the suit wherein the claim to which such period relates is contested.

EXPLANATION.—Nothing is an interruption within the meaning of this section, unless where there is an actual discontinuance of the possession or enjoyment by reason of an obstruction by the act of some person other than the claimant, and unless such obstruction is submitted to or acquiesced in for one year after the claimant has notice thereof and of the person making or authorizing the same to be made.

Illustrations.

(a).—A suit is brought in 1881 for obstructing a right of way. The defendant admits the obstruction but denies the right of way. The plaintiff proves that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him, claiming title thereto as an easement and as of right, without interruption, from 1st January 1860 to 1st January 1880. The plaintiff is entitled to judgment.

(b).—In a like suit also brought in 1881 the plaintiff merely proves that he enjoyed the right in manner aforesaid from 1858 to 1878. The suit shall be dismissed, as no exercise of the right by actual user has been proved to have taken place within two years next before the institution of the suit.

(c).—In a like suit the plaintiff shows that the right was peaceably and openly enjoyed by him for twenty years. The defendant proves that the plaintiff on one occasion during the twenty years had asked his leave to enjoy the right. The suit shall be dismissed.

(d).—A diverts B's watercourse and claiming title thereto as an easement, peaceably and openly enjoys the same for twenty years without interruption. At the end of that period A's right to the watercourse becomes absolute and indefeasible.

Exclusion in favour of reversioner of servient tenement.

28. Provided that, when any land or water upon, over, or from which any easement has been enjoyed or derived has been held under or by virtue of any interest for life or any term of years exceeding three years from the granting thereof, the time of the enjoyment of such easement during the continuance of such interest or term, shall be excluded in the computation of the said last-mentioned period of twenty years, in case the claim is, within three years next after the determination of such interest or term, resisted by the person entitled, on such determination, to the said land or water.

Illustration.

A sues for a declaration that he is entitled to a right of way over B's land. A proves that he has enjoyed the right for twenty-five years; but B shows that during ten of these years C had a life interest in the land, that on C's death B became entitled to the land, and that within two years after C's death he contested A's claim to the right. The suit must be dismissed, as A, with reference to the provisions of this section, has only proved enjoyment for fifteen years.

Extinguishment of right to property.

29. At the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property, his right to such property shall be extinguished

Possession by successive trespassers.

30. Where a series of trespassers adverse to one another and to the rightful owner of any immoveable property or hereditary office take and keep possession thereof for several periods each less than the period so limited, but collectively exceeding such period, the person who is in possession of such property or office when the title of the rightful owner would have been extinguished had the trespassers not been adverse to one another, shall have a right to such possession.

Nothing in this section shall operate to bar any right to possession which any earlier trespasser may have against any later trespasser who has illegally dispossessed him.
